

CITY GOVERNMENT.

PROBABLE THAT OLD RESERVOIR WILL BE SOLD TO METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD—QUESTION OF DISPOSING OF $60,000 OF MORE APPARENT INTEREST.

The proposition of the Metropolitan Water Board to purchase the old covered reservoir on Ward street for $60,000, and to permit the city to have the covered reservoir continue to overflow into the Ward street reservoir as at present, to furnish water to this city free of charge in all cases of emergency, was the chief subject for consideration at the board of aldermen's special meeting Monday evening.

There is a difference of opinion concerning the disposition of the $60,000 which appears to be more important than the sale itself. It was undoubtedly this that kept the finance committee in session for about an hour prior to the meeting, thus delaying the board's convening until 8.45.

The communication from the water board was read after which Alderman Dana said: "The committee have not investigated the matter sufficiently to make a complete report. Individually its members are in favor of the sale of the old reservoir. They believe it would be advisable to accept the offer."

Mr. Dana then offered resolutions which provided that the finance committee be instructed to offer for adoption at the Sept. 10 meeting, an order authorizing the sale of the old reservoir and further instructing the committee to offer recommendations at the Sept. 10 meeting as to what disposition should be made of the $60,000. The resolutions were unanimously adopted and without debate.

It was voted to appropriate $19,000 to cover Newton's assessment levied by the Metropolitan park commission on account of land improvement and seizures along the banks of the Charles river.

After the adoption of the above order, Chairman Bailey announced the appointment of Alderman Fisher to fill the vacancy on the public property committee caused by the illness of Alderman Briston. For the same reason he had seen fit to make Alderman Weeks chairman of the police committee and appoint Alderman Wedon a third member of that committee.

The board adjourned at 9 o'clock.

The Appetite of a Goat

New Charles River Police.

There is no more important, no larger and no more picturesque reservation controlled by the Metropolitan Park Commission, says the Boston Globe, than that which covers the banks of the upper Charles river at Riverside and Auburndale.

It is the daily rendezvous for scores of canoeists, and Saturdays and Sundays the crowd usually numbers 1000 or more. The widest and most attractive part of the river lies between Waltham and Newton Lower Falls, where the commission has made seizures.

Like many other popular resorts this favorite part of the river has, in days gone by, suffered its share of visits from the disorderly element. For a number of years complaint was heard and the police of this city sought to remedy the evil. They were given authority in Weston, which town is across the river from the Newton shores, and were fairly successful in the effort. It was an additional expense, however, and the city finally appealed to the commission, which last winter had decided upon plans for policing the river. A boathouse on Commonwealth avenue and in the vicinity of the Weston bridge, was secured as quarters for the men. It was thoroughly overhauled and refitted.

Before detailing a force for the service the commission considered the subject and its deliberations resulted in the selection of Sergt. E. B. West and four patrolmen. A naphtha launch was provided with several yaws.

The headquarters are well appointed and are intelligently arranged with an eye to the comfort of the men. There is also every facility to aid them in their work. Life preservers, ropes, etc., are within easy reach of the boat, while there is a portable equipment of this character in the naphtha launch and in each yawl.

About a month ago Sergt. West and his officers entered upon their duties at the Auburndale and Riverside reservation. Each patrolman has his route which he covers in his yawl, while the sergeant overlooks from the launch the entire district from the Moody street bridge at Waltham to the railroad bridge at Newton Lower Falls. The men are on duty from 12 noon until 10.30 p. m.

Since the establishment of this system the Metropolitan police have rescued from drowning more than half a dozen persons. In each case their active efforts were acknowledged and the commissioners much gratified with the work of the officers.

There has been but one fatal accident this summer, yet it is only fair to say that metropolitan officers have prevented many which might have occurred.

The effect which the presence of the officers has had in suppressing the evil is surely a truly marvelous, and while no arrests have been found necessary the river has had a manifold attraction for visitors.

The Local Press as an Advertising Medium.

The New York publication, Newspaperdom, has this to say in favor of the local newspaper, and it is true: "The readers who consult the advertising columns are home and fireside readers. The advertising columns do carry news to them and they read those columns to get that news. The fact that advertisements bring customers to the merchant's counters proves that the news is read and believed. These are the facts that make the country weekly, semi weekly and daily papers comparatively more valuable as advertising mediums than the city dailies. The rural papers are almost entirely distributed to homes to be read. The advertisement that gets into a home is going to earn money there for the advertiser. The man who is sure of reaching the family, which is the very fountain-head of the stream of custom he desires, is the man who advertises in the country newspaper."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists, price 75c. per bottle. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The Hospital Fire.

On the afternoon of Thursday, May 31, 1900, fire broke out in one of the contagious wards of the Newton Hospital. The nurse in charge, Miss Gertrude McPherson, proved herself equal to the emergency by promptly removing the patients in her charge to a place of safety. Her good deed is gratefully commemorated in the following lines by Miss Alice C. Jennings of Auburndale.

The soft and slumberous air
With gentle touch is pressed
On many a fevered brow
That longs for needed rest.

Serene, and calm, and strong,
The watcher waits beside—
Nor dreams an hour shall see
Love, strength and wisdom fled.

Behold a swift alarm!
And, dreading, uncontrolled,
The breath of growing flame
In clouds of smoke is rolled.

Remembering but her care,
By no weak fear enslaved,
Those sick and helpless ones
Her strength and courage saved.

Saved! saved from greater ill
Than e'en the fever heat—
In thankful accents they
The happy tale repeat.

For this, her crucial hour,
No accident had armed—
Long discipline had taught
To meet it unalarmed.

The faithful years prepared
For this, the moment's need—
The daily duty done
For this, the crowning deed.

Not to us all is given
To focus all the power
Reserved for times of need
In one heroic hour.

But who their daily task,
Unselfish, brave and true,
However small or vast,
As in God's eye shall do.

New victories still shall win—
For every power find play,
And sweet and glad reward
Shall wait the final day.

It Saved His Leg.

P. A. Danforth of LaGrange, Ga., suffered for six months with a frightful runnel sore on his leg, but writes that Bucklen's Arnica Salve wholly cured it in five days. For Ulcers, Wounds, Piles, it's the best salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25c. Sold by Arthur Hudson.

Norumbega Park.

Fourth of July week is always more or less of a holiday week and the attendance at Norumbega Park has proved this to be the case. On Monday and Tuesday the attendance was extraordinarily large for week days, and on the Fourth it was about 18,000. Strangely enough, in the four years of the park's existence not one holiday has been unpleasant; May 30 of 1897 was rainy but the Park did not open for a few days after that date.

The illumination on the evening of the Fourth made Norumbega a veritable fairy land; the myriads of lanterns and lights made the place almost as bright as day. Many people sat in the music court for hours preferring to listen to the music, and take the time to visit the many other attractions. St. Augustine's band gave concerts throughout the day, playing beside popular and classical selections, many patriotic airs. The Columbia Orpheus Club, which has been scoring great success throughout the week was applauded even more than was predicted. Next week J. W. Gorman's Minstrels will appear at the Park, and will be followed by those who remember and like the old-time black face fun and music have a treat in store for them in this company.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed yellow, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves it matches merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by Arthur Hudson.

Death of James Dooling.

James Dooling, a former well known Boston caterer, died quite suddenly Friday afternoon at his home on Highland terrace, Newtonville. Death was due to an internal trouble with which he had been ill but a few days.

Mr. Dooling was born in Halifax, N. S., and was about 62 years of age. He received his education in the schools of his native city, and later came to Boston.

About 35 years ago he opened a catering establishment at the South end, which soon grew to be one of the largest of its kind in the city. Later Mr. Dooling located in Temple place, and then on Tremont street. He retired about three years ago.

During his career as a caterer Mr. Dooling had the patronage of the Lancers, Anients and other prominent organizations, as well as well known individuals. One of the most notable of his feats was catering for over 5000 persons, including the President and his cabinet, at the centennial anniversary of the battle of Bennington.

Mr. Dooling formerly lived in Brookline, but about three years ago he removed to Newtonville. He leaves a widow, three sons, two of whom are in the hotel business in Montreal, and four daughters, one of whom is a teacher in the Newton public schools.

The funeral took place Monday morning at the Church of Our Lady. The services were attended by a large number of relatives and friends. Requiem mass was celebrated at 10 o'clock by the Rev. Fr. Gilfeather. The body was removed to Forest Hills for interment. The service at the church was preceded by a service of prayer at 8.30 o'clock at the late residence of Mr. Dooling on Highland terrace, Newtonville.

Was It a Miracle?

"The marvellous cure of Mrs. Rena J. Stout of Consumption has created intense excitement in Cammack, Ind., writes Marion Stuart, a leading druggist of Muncie, Ind. She only weighed 90 pounds when her doctor in Yorktown said she must soon die. Then she began to use Dr. King's New Discovery and gained 37 pounds in weight and was completely cured." It has cured thousands of hopeless cases, and is positively guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung diseases. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at Arthur Hudson's.

Zounds—Well, how about this table? Gadzooks—Won't do. I have never feed the waiter, and he would doubtless expect me to begin today.—New York Tribune.

In Favor of Bryan.

The following letter is sent us for publication, by a gold Democrat, as giving the views of the supporters of Mr. Bryan. The writer is a lifelong Democrat, and his views seem to be those of the majority of the Democrats of the country:

230 Mechanic Street, Orange, Mass., June 23, 1900.
My Dear Friend:—Many thanks for your very pleasant and breezy letter. And now having the leisure I thought it an opportunity to acknowledge its reception, and perhaps offer a few reasons for my difference of opinion relative to the withdrawal of Mr. Bryan from his candidacy for the Presidential nomination, and to meekly take second place on the ticket. My first reason for dissent such a suicidal course is, that all hopes or reasonable expectations of a successful campaign would be thrown wholly away. Mr. Bryan received 6,502,925 votes in 1896, while the Almighty Gold Bug party, Palmer and Buckner, had 133,424 votes. If there were others, they suiked in their tents or boldly voted for McKinley, and now they want to come to the front and rule, or else ruin the chance of electing anyone but McKinley, who stands for militarism, empire and colonialism and trusts. Another reason is, that over two-thirds, 7.8 of the delegates have already been instructed to vote for Mr. Bryan. This shows that the voice of the people is strongly in his favor. Another reason is that there is no other man that can be named that is in any way his equal in ability and stamina with back bone enough to resist the influences of the monopolists and bankers. This is shown by their desertion in 1896 of the Democratic party because the majority wanted to establish bimetalism. Hence they cried down silver and did then all they could to demoralize the white metal, even as a commodity of trade, sneered at the 50 cent dollar, etc. But now in establishing the gold dollar, as the unit of value, then these same chaps pledge themselves to maintain the value of every dollar, whether silver or paper, and make them all redeemable in gold. If silver is an American commodity, as is wheat, cotton, and tobacco, why attempt to lessen its value?

Another reason for standing faithfully for Bryan is, that his name is the synonym for faithfulness to his party, and a staunch advocate of the rights of the working men, and he possesses abilities in his preponderance over any man that can be named in the party. Of course the trusts and monopolies of every sort and kind, who oppose him. The party now in power have only but a short time to take the republic to an empire; if not in name, yet in reality, as just think of the whole sale murder going on in the Filipino Islands. It seems as though our country's officials are doing up with the blood of men, women and children, 25,000 of them murdered to enable our good Methodist president with shot, shell and gassing guns, to persuade the poor devils to bend the knee and kiss the hand of the oppressor. That's one way to make ardent patriots. And now forsooth these Gold Democrats are willing to come back into the party, and they can sit in Moses' seat in the synagogue. I think if they were a little more modest in their demands, and were willing to take a more humble position for a season, that it would be a little more becoming in them, for we don't forget that they did every thing in their power to assist the election of McKinley, and now they must be content to occupy the position they have chosen, for the simple reason that they have lost confidence as to their democracy. They were all opposed to the high protective tariff, yet they ignored all of the ideas the party had of a tariff for revenue and allied themselves with the protectionists. They were the basis for all of our trusts. Were they honestly Democrats? or were they playing hooky? The gold partisans are the advocates of all of our trusts, water and all, and they buy up the legislation so that now all the laws are made in the interest of the dollar; never for man.

All that saved us from an awful panic last December when call money went up 130 per cent interest, was the turning over of $105,000,000 to the pet banks, and they still have it free of interest, all but $5,000,000 of it. It wasn't a gold currency that pulled them through. The banks can make loans upon 90 per cent. Ever more and more the farmer or mechanic any thing? No. And now it is these gold men that sneer at 10 to 1 that want to dominate the Democratic party. They are the party that have the basis for all of our trusts. Were they honestly Democrats? or were they playing hooky? The gold partisans are the advocates of all of our trusts, water and all, and they buy up the legislation so that now all the laws are made in the interest of the dollar; never for man.

Everybody seems bent on a trip to the Provinces, judging by the throng which may be seen daily at the Plant line office, 290 Washington street, Boston, purchasing tickets, and the scenes at Lewis Wharf on sailing days are equal to the despatching of an ocean liner for Europe. The sea trip of six hundred and sixty miles without a stop, thence through the Bras d'Or Lakes to Halifax, in the straits of Canso, and home on the "Hullfax" or "Duchesse," with nearly a day at Halifax, is proving a great drawing card. Street Railway Franchise.

Newton, June 20, 1900.

To the Editor of the GRAPHIC:—

A spectacle was presented last night in the Newton Board of Aldermen which is almost without parallel in aldermanic boards, and to which the writer thinks the attention of the citizens of Newton should be called. Owing to the lateness of the hour, no reporters were present. The facts are these:—

The Waltham Street Railway Company, having as its incorporators 60 per cent of Newton tax payers, presented a petition to build a street railway from the Waltham line to Newtonville square, offering to widen portions of Walnut, Crafts and Waltham streets to a width of 70 feet, and to build two roadways on each side and light the whole distance with arc lights, at a distance of 100 feet apart. In other words to construct a boulevard the length of its line in Newton.

The Newton Street Railway Company, having as its incorporators 30 per cent of Newton tax payers, petitioned for the right to build a railway over the same route, promising nothing except to build it. Some reflection having by inference been cast upon their good faith, they offered to file a bond for $25,000 to build their road within six months.

The Waltham Street Railway Company's case was ably presented and all the facts as stated above were clearly set forth to the board of aldermen, but their petition was denied, and the franchise granted to the Newton Street Railway Company as prayed for. After a lunch, and some little time no doubt spent in thinking the matter over, the question was reopened and a street widening clause of 60 feet was incorporated in the franchise.

Now come the questions, in the wisdom of the board of aldermen, it was seen best to grant the franchise of the Newton Street Railway Company, why were not the aldermen fair and wise enough to impose upon them the same conditions which the Waltham Street Railway Company voluntarily offered to assume? If building a boulevard through a section of our city and lighting the same from end to end is not a consideration for the aldermen, it certainly should be for the tax payers.

We have this condition of facts before us: The Waltham Street Railway Company with the franchise granted it by the City of Waltham to the Newton line, and the Newton Street Railway Company with the franchise granted it by the City of Newton to the Waltham line, and between them both we authors can well say with Mercury: "A plague on both your houses," because it is evident neither will be built.

A great deal of stress was laid last night upon the vested rights of the Newton Street Railway Company and that competition would hurt them. The facts as set forth by the official returns comparing their earnings for the past three years when they have been paralleled by the Wellesley & Boston, show a constant and increasing gain in earnings each year, and the writer very much doubts if the Newton Street Railway Company would materially suffer in earnings if the franchise had been granted to the Waltham Street Railway Co. The theory of street railways, particularly of those in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, goes clearly to show that competition is a benefit rather than an injury. B. L. JONES.

A CURIOUS PROPOSITION.

The amount of money to be received from the sale of the old reservoir is such a windfall that it seems to have demoralized some of the financiers in the board of aldermen.
Instead of turning the money over to the water department, where it belongs, it is seriously proposed to use it for a lot of other purposes, or a majority of the amount, leaving only some ten thousand for the water department. Of course it practically amounts to the same thing but as long as the water department is kept entirely separate from the other departments,
money received from the sale of property
that the water department has paid for should be turned over to that account, so that the books would show the real condition of the department.

It is proposed to use $35,000 to build the new contagious ward of the hospital.
$6,000 to furnish the new Bigelow school,
another sum not stated to purchase land
for that new schoolhouse at Chestnut Hill, and to turn the balance, some $10,000 over to the water sinking fund. Such a proceeding would certainly make a curious record in the books of the water department, and it would make a precedent that would soon make it impossible to tell anything about the condition of that department.

So far the accounts have been so kept that it is possible to tell just how the water department stands, how much it has cost the city, and the probabilities as to
when the two million debt of the department will be paid off. But if this scheme is carried out all this will be changed.

If such a thing is to be done, a better way would be to borrow the money from the water department, giving the usual interest and providing for its repayment, at some definite time. This would keep the funds of the department intact, and not mix things up so that even the famous Philadelphia lawyer could not tell just how the department stood.

A man who carries on a small business
may mix the receipts and expenses of all branches of his business up so that neither he nor any one else can tell which pays
and which does not, but it is considered very bad book keeping and in all large business corporations separate accounts
are kept and the strictest system employed
and this ought to be the case in the affairs of the city. Most business men who have been questioned think this scheme is a rather ridiculous one.

Another point has been raised which seems to be well grounded. That is that the old reservoir is part of the assets of the water department, on which the bonds
were raised, and that the money really belongs to the bondholders and not to the city. It is illegal to sell mortgaged property, and appropriate the money for other purposes than paying the debt, and there is talk of an injunction if the money derived from this sale is put to use outside of the water department. It is claimed that the only legal use of the money is not to turn it over to the sinking fund, which represents money raised by taxation, nor to use it for general city purposes, but to place it to the credit of the water department for construction purposes, which would keep the value of the assets of the department
intact, although it might not temporarily reduce the tax rate.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CONTEST.

In our last issue we gave some reasons
for our belief that Brookline would not,
the present year, press the nomination of one of its citizens for congressional honors.
The old 9th Congressional District, to which Brookline and Newton belonged,
was made up of portions of Middlesex, Worcester and Norfolk counties. The present district is made up of the same counties, to which has been added a part of Suffolk county. During the last twenty years there have been ten republican congressional nominations. Of these ten, eight have been given to the county of Norfolk, two to the county of Worcester, and none to the county of Middlesex. Of the eight given to the county of Norfolk,
six have been given to the town of Brookline.

county, would certainly appear very unjust
and unfair. It must be borne in mind that Middlesex county has always been loyal to the republican ticket, and that more than once it has saved the defeat of the party
during the period above referred to. If our republican friends in Brookline would carefully and candidly consider the situation, we feel confident that they will acquiesce in the nomination this year being warded to the county of Middlesex.

This is the way the New York Evening Post explains the legislative habit that seems to be so prevalent in Massachusetts.
It says: "The seventh month of the year has opened with the Massachusetts Legislature, which met early in January, still in session. The people of the Bay state are accustomed to having their lawmakers take nearly or quite half a year to do their work, and that, too, although the Legislature meets annually. The fact is that Massachusetts gives about four times as many months to legislation in every two years as a number of states which have a much larger population and greater interests. It seems to be largely a matter of habit. The lawmakers have fallen into the way of doing next to nothing during the first few weeks of each session, with the result that important matters are pushed forward into the late spring and early summer. One would suppose that a body which sits so long would be deliberative in its action, but the complaints of haste at the end of half a year appear to be as loud in Massachusetts as in states
where the length of a biennial session is restricted by the constitution to 60 or 90 days."

COMPLAINT comes from all parts of the city, of the girdling of shade trees along the street by horses. In some cases the trees have been killed, and in many cases
they are permanently injured. A demand is being made that something shall be done about it, and the police have been instructed to get the names of all owners of horses
that are left tied to trees, or left untied so that they might do injury to the trees.
There is a city ordinance against using trees for hitching posts, but the absence of posts about the city has caused the ordinance to become a dead letter. Horses can not be left in the street without hitching,
and hence the trees are used, together with friendly lamp posts. The suggestion has been made that people be allowed to use
the trees provided they muzzle their horses
which would be one way out of the difficulty. Possibly some arrests may be made by the police and the city ordinance enforced.

The police took excellent precautions
the night before the Fourth, and the result was that there was very little disturbance,
and a tolerably quiet night. Several plans for "fun" were nipped in the bud, as the crowd found special policemen waiting for them when they arrived at the place where they expected to have free scope. In one case a large crowd appeared about midnight, near a fence that has been unpopular, with the intention of pulling it down,
but they found policemen on guard and they left without any disturbance. This is only a sample of the good work done by the police, as they were very wide awake and caught on to the schemes almost as soon as they were formed. No damage of any special importance is reported from any part of the city, and the trouble is now
over for another year.

Gov. CRANE is making a record as a veto governor, and his influence seems to be paramount in the legislature, as no bill is able to survive his veto. That is because he takes the right side, and it shows the importance of having a reliable man as governor, to correct the mistakes of the legislators and prevent their doing harm to the state. If now there could only be some power to compel the passage of needed legislation, which is opposed by the corporations, who are so powerful in the Senate, we should have an ideal kind of government. As long as legislators are selected according to the present method, without much regard to their fitness, it is imperative that the people should exercise
the greatest care in selecting their governors, in order that what rights have survived shall be still left to them.

THERE is an interesting report that Mr.
E. L. Pickard has consented to stand as a candidate for Mayor this fall. If true this will probably mean an exciting contest,
which will wake people up to the fact that Newton is a city by itself. Our recent one-sided city elections have been so quiet that people have lost a good deal of the interest
they used to have in city affairs, and a hot election is needed to wake them up. If
Mr. Pickard should be a candidate, and Mayor Wilson should express a willingness to accept another term, and all the other men whose names have been mentioned should go into the contest seriously, it would give us one of the old fashioned contests that made life in Newton worth living.

NEWTON people are scattering all over the country, and there will be hardly a summer resort of any importance in New England that does not have its representatives from the Garden City. They may not find as beautiful a place as their own city,
and will probably have to do without many modern conveniences that they have come to regard as absolute necessities, but they get the change of air and scene, which is the main object of a vacation, and they will return home with a fund of health and good spirits stored up for the work and worry of the year to come.

MAJOR WILSON has vetoed the $8000 appropriated for land for the Chestnut Hill school house and nose house, as it would cost nearly five thousand dollars to fit up the lot selected for use. He has also vetoed the $19,000 appropriation for Newton's share of the Metropolitan Park Improvements, as the commission has not made any assessment as yet and may not make any this year.

The Boston Budget had a full page portrait of Mr. Samuel L. Powers last Sunday, and in a review of the congressional contest, the Budget says:
It is the opinion of those best conversant with the situation that he will receive the Congressional nomination in the 11th District, and it is possible that he may receive it without any contest whatever. If elected

he is sure to take high rank among the members of the popular branch of Congress, and prove an able and useful member for the people of his district.

The board of aldermen did not take very long to approve of that offer of the Metropolitan Water Board, for our old reservoir.
It is a very advantageous one for Newton,
and also advantageous for the Metropolitan board.

June Mortality Statement
There were 35 deaths in this city during June making the rate per thousand 15.22.
Of the entire number 24 were males and 11
females. The greatest number of deaths from one cause was four, pneumonia and old age equaling in figures. There were one case of typhoid fever, 13 cases of diptheria, cases of scarlet fever, 1 of typhoid fever
and 3 of measles.

Police Court.
In the police court, this morning, Charley Sheer, the Chinaman, charged with assault, was bound over for trial in the Superior court, in $2500 bonds.

Nonantum Boys' Club.
The sixth annual report of the Nonantum Boys' Club will soon be issued and gives much interesting information as to the good work this club has done the past year. It had a larger fund than usual, thanks to the generosity of the people of Newton, and so it has been able to enlarge its work. Most of the boys work in the mills, and it seeks to furnish a pleasant and profitable place for them to spend their evenings. It has held regular meetings on an average of five times a week, a well supplied reading room has been maintained, classes in cobbler and carpentry have been successfully conducted,
debating and dancing classes and a current events class have been regularly held. Ten lectures were given on Natural History by Mr. Maynard, through the kindness of Mrs. George Linder, Rev. Edward Everett
Hale gave a talk on the Concord Fight.
Mr. Charles Williams of Harvard gave a reading, and several other entertainments were provided, closing with a reception by Miss Eddy and Miss Loveland to the boys. It is said 180 boys were registered and it is hoped to still further enlarge the work next year, and to do this more educated young people are invited to assist in the club.

An arrangement has been placed on the switch now which will probably prevent any more accidents of the character which occurred last Friday evening.

Newton Hospital.

The usual meeting of the Newton Hospital trustees took place on Thursday afternoon, the 28th ult., with President Leeson in the chair, and members present as follows: Messadmes Haskell, Lodge, Paine, Messrs. Bullens, Ellison, Haskell, Pettie, Tyler, Dr. Shinn, Drs. Eaton, Seales.

The Treasurer's report gave expenses amounting to $213.40, and income of $850.97 for the quarter. The endowment funds of the Hospital had been added to during the last quarter by legacy from the estate of Hannah W. Loring of $2500, and from the estate of Mary H. Loring of $3000. Dr. Seales for the Executive committee reported average number of patients for March, April and May, 79, 70 and 59, respectively. Some improvements and repairs had been made or ordered. The work of the Training School was presented by Dr. Eaton as progressing satisfactorily. During the quarter considerable sickness among the nurses had been occasioned by the over crowding of the contagious wards, and although the number of nurses enrolled is 37, nearly all calls for nurses for outside work have had to be declined, owing to the quantity and quality of the work required in the various wards.

The following tribute was read by Dr. Shinn: "The Trustees of the Newton Hospital realize that they have met a most serious loss in the death of their late fellow member, Mr. Darius Emerson, and desire to put upon record their appreciation of his enthusiastic helpfulness in the work for which they are associated."

"It is most gratifying to them to recall how strongly the hospital has been held of him as he understood the nature and extent of its aims so that in a certain high sense he became one of its warmest friends, one of its most ardent advocates and one of its most generous helpers."

"It seemed to furnish an outlet for the tenderness and charity of a most loving heart, and in laboring for its welfare were spent some of the happiest hours of his life. His duties here in examining and caring for the sick, and in the erection of new buildings, and in the improvement and ornamentation of the grounds became his labor of love. He gave freely of his best thought, of his time and strength and means, and while singularly unambitious, unconsciously so associated himself and his memory with this institution that it will be a long year before he can be forgotten."

The Trustees, deeply mourning his loss, feel that the removal of such a faithful worker is a great loss to the hospital, and upon others to take up the work with increased diligence, so that the care of the sick and the maimed and the relief of suffering may be in no wise retarded, but that the hospital may be enabled to continue its mission to those who in this transitory life meet their experience of pain."

Mr. Frank A. Day was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy.

Some inquiries from other cities relative to the work and methods of the Hospital were noted, which show the high opinion the success of this institution has called forth. The subject of the building of the new contagious wards was taken up at some length and entered into with much interest.

The following vote was taken: "The Trustees of the Hospital desire to express to the Newton Fire Department their hearty appreciation of the valuable service rendered on the afternoon of May 31st. What might have been a disastrous disaster not only to property but to many helpless sufferers was promptly controlled by the department in a manner illustrating its skill and discipline. It is hereby resolved that the citizens owe a debt of gratitude which is officially expressed by the Hospital Trustees."

After general discussion as to the advisability of these changes, the Trustees, and also as to the introduction of suitable training for the nurses relative to their duties in case of a fire breaking out, the meeting adjourned.

THE MOTHER SONG.

Mother, oh, mother, forever I cry for you!
Sing the old songs I may never forget.
Even in slumber I murmur and sigh for you—
Mother, oh, mother,
Sing low, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

Mother, oh, mother, the years are so lonely,
Filled but with weariness, doubt and regret!
Can't you come back to me, for tonight only,
Mother, oh, mother,
And sing, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

Mother, oh, mother, of old I had never
One wish denied me nor trouble to fret;
Now—must I cry out all vainly forever,
Mother, sweet mother,
Oh, sing, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

Mother, oh, mother, most longing and sorrow
Leave me in darkness, with eyes ever wet
And never the hope of meeting tomorrow?
Answer me, mother,
And sing, "Little brother,

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Mr. Tompkins' Will

Did the Spirits Carry Out the Wishes of the Dying Man?

"I never was what you may call superstitious," said a lawyer from the country as he sat in the courtroom awaiting the judge, "but I had an experience once that has ever since induced me not to scoff at what is called the supernatural. Mr. Tompkins was one of the first clients my father, who was a lawyer, ever had. He was wealthy and had, as was supposed, never been married. He lived in an old homestead not far from a well known city up the state, and his wants were attended to by an elderly housekeeper and several servants, male and female. After I became a lawyer it was my duty to see Mr. Tompkins quite frequently in relation to his property and so forth. He was a kindly man, somewhat reserved, and when I first knew him, probably 65 years of age. He had a strong personality both as to appearance and character. He was over six feet and stout in proportion. His face was always clean shaven, and he wore his hair long. When I knew him, it had turned to gray, but was as abundant as ever. His carriage was erect, and his general appearance was such as, if once observed, could not well be forgotten.

"Mr. Tompkins was in the habit of spending a good deal of time away from home, and the impression of my father and myself was that he was recuperating in Florida. He went and returned without notice, and his domestics, being used to his ways, never troubled themselves at his absence, while at the same time they were exceedingly careful to have everything ready for his reception whenever he might return. Neither to me nor to my father did he ever utter any explanation of his absences from home or make any allusion to them whatsoever.

"One day Mr. Tompkins came to our office and asked for my father. He was not in just then, and Mr. Tompkins sat down and talked with me. He asked me how I had spent my time at college and about my associates and my age and many other things. After a pause which lasted some moments he said:

"You have reached that age when you should marry. The best thing in the world for you is to get a wife as soon as you can take care of one. A man is safer when he marries early."

"I looked out of the window and saw my father coming toward the office.

"My father is coming," I said.

"Mr. Tompkins arose and glanced toward the street. Then he stepped to one side and appeared to me to be brushing something off his coat sleeve. The next instant he wheeled right round, staggered and fell. My father entered just at the time, and both of us hastened to raise Mr. Tompkins and place him on a chair. We sent for his physician right away, and when he came he said that Mr. Tompkins was suffering from an attack of apoplexy. He was conveyed to his home, and the best attendance was procured for him.

"My father's impression was that his client had come to see him on some important business, for he never visited the office unless a matter in which he was deeply and anxiously interested impelled him to do so. His usual custom was to send his carriage for my father when he desired to consult him. What the subject could be which induced Mr. Tompkins to visit the office that morning neither my father nor I could divine.

"We talked over the incident long and carefully, and in the course of the conversation I mentioned to my father some facts which it had not struck me before were of sufficient importance to mention. It was not often that at that time in my history I visited New York. In fact, up to the time of which I speak I had been to the city only twice. It was a circumstance which occurred on my last visit that I mentioned to my father. The business that took me to the city was in relation to some documents affecting wooded lands up the state in which a client was interested. I met an old college friend, and one day he and I went down to Long Branch together. After talking in the sights we were naturally hungry and went to the best hotel we could select. Seated at a table near to us was a party consisting of an elderly gentleman and lady and several young people of both sexes, ranging from 5 to 18 years. The gentleman was seated with his back to me, and it struck me that I was familiar with the contour of the head. I tried hard to get a sight of the face, but did not succeed until I was leaving, when I so managed as to procure a pretty good view of the gentleman's countenance.

"Why," said I to my friend, "that is Mr. Tompkins, an old client of my father."

"I faced round and looked the gentleman square in the eye, but he never winced or gave the slightest indication of recognition. Then I went away with my mind in a turmoil. If I had been called upon to swear to the man's identity in a court of law, I would have done so without hesitation but for the fact that, though returning my glance with one as prolonged and steady as my own, he had shown no sign of recognition.

"Now, I needn't tell you how my father and myself began to speculate on what thoughts were exchanged. Suffice to say that none of our surmises approached the truth.

"And now, to go back to Mr. Tompkins' sudden seizure and the events which followed. Of course our inquiries after the sick man were frequent, and my father called several times, but Mr. Tompkins did not for some time recover consciousness. At length he began to evince some slight intelligence, and my father or myself was thereafter with him day and night, so that if he recovered his senses we might be ready to do anything for him he might desire in relation to the arrangement of his affairs. He had no relatives near at hand and, in fact, none with whom he ever directly communicated. He had a younger brother who had disgraced himself and been a convict and was occasionally helped through us by Mr. Tompkins, but always in so indirect a manner as to prevent his discovering the whereabouts of his benefactor. So far as we knew, Mr. Tompkins had made no will, and yet we knew that he must be worth over $1,500,000.

"But I will come to the occurrence to which I alluded at the outset. I was sitting in the sick man's room one night reading before the fire. He grew restless, and I arose and saw that he was moving and struggling as though trying to rise. I spoke to him, and he tried hard to respond and gripped my hand with extraordinary vigor for so sick a person. Seeing that he was using every exertion to sit up in bed, I helped him as well as I could, but just as he had acquired an apparently upright position his frame relaxed, and he fell back. I stood by him for some minutes, and as he seemed to be breathing easily, I resumed my place at the bedside, once and again casting a glance at the bed.

"Suddenly I experienced a strange sensation, and, on looking up, I saw a spectral figure standing right opposite me. I rose with an exclamation of surprise and approached the form, wondering how the sick man could have left his bed and passed me without my having observed him. I did not lose my presence of mind, but took a step toward the dimly outlined figure. Then I saw that one hand was pointing toward a small, old fashioned desk which stood on the top of a bookcase. As my eye followed the direction indicated the form disappeared. I turned, expecting to see the figure moving toward the bed. Nothing, however, was visible. I went to the bed and gazed upon a corpse!

"The man was dead beyond question. I summoned the housekeeper and other attendants, and when the body was properly disposed of all of us quitted the room. I locked the door and gave the key into the custody of the housekeeper, directing her to allow no one to enter the room until my father came next day with the undertaker.

"Next morning I accompanied my father to the house. I had already informed him what had occurred, and as soon as some other matters were arranged my father took the desk, and we retired to another room. On opening the desk there was apparently nothing in it but a quire of note paper. We made a close examination; but, as it was simply a desk to be carried in the hand or in a trunk, we found nothing that would indicate any secret drawer. I took up the note paper and carefully turned over the sheets. A surprise was in store, for on the inside sheet there was writing. It turned out to be the holographic will of the deceased—that is, a will wholly written by himself. It bore date the very day when he last visited our office and was struck down by apoplexy.

"The will left all in trust to a certain woman for the benefit of the testator's five children, mentioned by name, with their places of abode. The name of the trustee I cannot, of course, mention, nor would it be right to give the address. The will was duly admitted to probate. The trustee did not bear the name of the testator, but all the children did.

"How do I account for the spectral form? Well, I think he had felt symptoms of the attack which carried him off and wrote the will and came directly to our office, intending to inform my father of the fact of its existence. At the point of separation from the body the spirit obeyed the last impulse of the dying man."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Children and Rivers.

"One of the hardest things I have to do," says a Boston schoolteacher, "is to get into my children's heads the notion that the streams rise in the mountains and flow toward the sea. It is next to impossible to make some of them comprehend anything about it. They see no reason why the river should not rise in the sea and flow into the mountains. Most of them have never seen a flowing stream. Many of them have seen the Charles river, and if they have noticed anything about it they have observed that it is just as apt to flow from the ocean as toward it.

"A babbling brook running down over little slopes and rapids or tumbling from the hill to the plain in cataracts is unknown to them. I have to resort to all sorts of images and illustrations to make them comprehend the idea of springs gushing from the hills, descending, joining, still seeking a lower level, and at last finding the sea. And then they don't comprehend it!"

WE ARE BOUND BY CREEDS.

By T. De Witt Talmage.

The unfortunate thing now is that so many Christians are only half liberated. They are bound hand and foot by religious creeds. Let no man misinterpret me as antagonizing creeds. I have eight or ten of them; a creed about religion, a creed about art, a creed about social life, a creed about government, and so on. A creed is something that a man believes, whether it be written or unwritten.

The Presbyterian Church is now agitated about its creed. Some good men in it are for keeping it because it was framed from the belief of John Calvin. Other good men in it want revision. I am with neither party. Instead of revision I want substitution.

It is impossible that people who lived hundreds of years ago should fashion an appropriate creed for our times. John Calvin was a great and good man, but he died 336 years ago.

I could call the names of twenty living Presbyterian ministers who could make a better creed than John Calvin. The nineteenth century ought not to be called to sit at the feet of the sixteenth.

But you say, it is the same old Bible, and John Calvin had that as well as the present student of the Scriptures. Yes, so it is the same old sun in the heavens, but in our time it has gone to making daguerotypes and photographs. It is the same old water, but in our century it has gone to running steam engines. It is the same old electricity, but in our time it has become a lightning-footed grand boy.

So it is the old Bible, but new applications, new uses, new interpretations. You must remember that during the last 300 years words have changed their meaning, and some of them now mean more, and some less.

I do not think that John Calvin believed, as some say he did, in the damnation of infants. A man who believes in the damnation of infants himself deserves to lose heaven. What Christ will do with all the babies in the next world I conclude from what He did with the babies in Palestine, when he hugged and kissed them.

I believe in the sovereignty of God, and I believe in man's free agency, but no one can harmonize the two. It is not necessary that we harmonize them. Every sermon that I have ever heard that attempted such harmonization was to me as clear as a London fog, as clear as mud. Do not try to measure either the finger of God or the thunderbolts of God with your little steel pen. What do you know about the decrees? You cannot pry open the door of God's eternal counsels. You cannot explain the mysteries of God's government now; much less the mysteries of His government five hundred quadrillion years ago.

I move for a creed for all our denominations made out of Scripture quotations pure and simple. "That would take the earth for God. That would be impregnable against infidelity and Apollonian assault. That would be beyond human criticism."

Let us make it simpler and plainer for people to get into the kingdom of God. Do not hinder people by the idea that they may not have been elected. Do not tag on to the one essential of faith in Christ any of the innumerable non-essentials.

A man who heartily accepts Christ is a Christian, and the man who does not accept him is not a Christian, and that is all there is to it. He need not believe in election or reprobation. He need not believe in the eternal generation of the Son. He need not believe in everlasting punishment. He need not believe in infant baptism. He need not believe in plenary inspiration. Faith in Christ is the criterion, the test, is the pivot, is the indispensable.

ORIENTAL SURGERY.

In Oriental countries simple methods are popular. Acute surgical cases are not obtained here. While the Japanese adopted all the most scientific methods of treating gunshot wounds in their last war, the Chinese soldiers much preferred to use charms, or "hoodoos."

A popular method of curing their wounds was to burn up a mouse and put the ashes in the soldier's wound. A Chinaman believes that he can destroy warts on his hands if he steals something. He also thinks he can cure a colic if he turns the soles of his shoes upmost when he goes to bed.

SEWING A WOUND.

In Arabia when the native surgeon wishes to bring together the edges of a gaping wound he hant up a few large ants. The native surgeons are, as a rule, barbers. The ant, held with a pair of forceps, opens its mandibles wide and as soon as it comes in contact with anything closes them together with all its might. The edges of the wound are brought as near together as possible and the ant is allowed to bite. The ant's body is snipped off, but he does not seem to mind that, and the head still retains its grip.

AN EXCEPTIONAL YOUNG MAN.

Said he: "Pretty miss, Pray give me a kiss, 'Tis for one—only one—that I sue." She lifted her eyes, And exclaimed in surprise, "Why, the other chaps always want two!"

GOVERNMENT BY BRUTE FORCE.

By U. S. Supreme Court Justice David J. Brewer.

It is said that the Anglo-Saxon race has manifested a capacity to govern well that we are of that race, and that, therefore, we could well govern the Philippine Islands as colonies. I do not question the capacity of the race well and wisely to govern others. I object to the Philippine policy because it antagonizes the principles upon which this Government was founded, which have controlled its life up to the present time, and the perfection of which has been the hope and aspiration of every true American.

Very few nations, very few individuals, live up to their high ideals, but surely the Declaration of Independence has been the ideal of our life, and we have striven to make it more and more real. Now, government by force is the very antipodes of this, and to introduce government by force over any portion of the nation is to start the second quarter of the second century of our life upon principles which are the exact opposite of those upon which we have hitherto lived. It is one thing to fail of reaching your ideal; it is an entirely different thing to deliberately turn your back upon it.

Government by consent and government by force, no matter how well the government may be administered, are two essentially antagonistic principles. Doubtless no immediate conflict will follow. We may see a large measure of prosperity; but are we not sowing the seeds which in the days to come will grow up into a harvest of trouble for our children and our children's children?

A necessity of colonial possessions is an increase in our regular army, and the first increase proposed is from 30,000 to 100,000 men. It is a strange commentary that at the close of the nineteenth century the head of the most arbitrary government in the civilized world, the Czar of the Russias, is inviting the nations of the world to a decrease in their arms, while this, the free land, is proposing an increase in its. Yet such seems to be the imperative need, if we enter upon the system of colonial expansion.

Now, the great economic problem in this country is not how can a few men make more money and pile up larger fortunes, but how can the great body of the people make a fair and comfortable living? The right to work is again and again insisted upon as more important than the right to vote, and the cry of the right to work is supplemented by the cry that the State furnish work to all who cannot obtain it elsewhere.

Are we likely to aid in solving this problem by bringing into our national life 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 of unskilled Malay laborers? We have shut the doors against the Chinese. Are they any worse than the Malays? Shall we introduce in this nation more cheap labor? I do not wonder at the action of the Federation of Labor in protesting against a new competition of cheap labor as well as an increase of the army, with its consequent increase of burden and taxation on the employed laborer.

But there is money in it. And after all this is really the most potent factor in the proposed reaching out after the islands of the Orient. The wealth of Ormus and of Ind is to-day, as in the days of Milton, the expectation and the dream of many. Possession of the Orient, with its accumulated wealth of centuries, dazzles the imagination and confuses the judgment. The haze of mystery hangs over that vast domain. Wealth untold is believed to be there, ready to be appropriated by any dominant power.

The problem we have sought to work out in this nation is that of government of and by and for the people. A great nation upon that principle seems possible only under a federal system, a system which relegates all matter of local interest to the several States, and exercises through the national government only those powers and functions which we are told we have become so great make for the general welfare.

And powerful that the world needs us, but what the world most needs is not the touch of our power, but the blessings of our example. It needs the bright example of a free people not disturbed by any illusions of territorial acquisition, of pecuniary gain or military glory, but content with their possessions, and striving through all the abilities, activities and industries of their wisest and most earnest to make the life of each individual citizen happier, better and more content.

Two visions rise before me: One of a nation growing in population, riches and strength; reaching out the strong hand to bring within its dominion weaker and distant races and lands; holding them by force for the rapid wealth they may bring—with perhaps occasional glory, success and sacrifice of war; a wondrously luxurious life into which the fortunate few shall enter; an accumulation of magnificence which for a term will charm and dazzle, and then the shadow of the awful question whether human nature has changed, and the old law, that history repeats itself, has lost its force, whether the ascending splendor of imperial power is to be followed by the descending gloom of luxury, decay and ruin.

The other of a nation where the spirit of the Pilgrim and the Huguenot remains the living and controlling force, affirming that the Declaration of Independence, the Farewell Address of the Father of his Country and the Monroe doctrine shall never pass into innocuous desuetude; devoting its energies to the development of the inexhaustible resources of its great continental territory; solving the problem of universal and political liberty; of a government by the consent of the governed, where no king, no class and no race rules, but each individual has equal voice and power in the control of all, where wealth comes only as the compensation for honest toil of hand or brain, where public service is private duty; a nation whose supreme value to the world lies not in its power, but in its unflinching loyalty to the high ideals of its youth, its forever lifting its strong hand, not to govern, but only to protect the weak; and thus the bright shining which brightens more and more into the fadeless eternal day.

Improved Tourist Car Service via Fitchburg Railroad.

The Pullman Company has turned four new second-class tourist cars out of their Chicago shops for service on the line of the Fitchburg Railroad and connections between Boston and Chicago. These cars are models of perfection, being equipped with all latest improvements, including Pinesh gas, double windows, high back seats, spacious lavatories, wide vestibules, etc. The bedding and the furniture are new and attractive, and the visit to the car by intending passengers is certain to insure a reservation.

The cars leave Boston, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays of every week.

New Colored Map of the Provinces.

The Plant Line has just published an attractive map folder printed in four colors. This is undoubtedly the most complete map of the Maritime Provinces ever issued. Besides showing names of towns, both inland and along shore, more than are usually shown in detail, it gives the names of light-houses, with a key describing each light, whether revolving or fixed, white or colored, and the number of miles visible. This should prove of interest to tourists and save the trouble of asking a good many questions. There are also a number of pages of text, with fine half-tone illustrations, describing scenes along the route, including Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, the Bras d'Or Lakes and Newfoundland. The map will be mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp by J. A. Flanders, N. E. Agent, 230 Washington Street, or E. H. Downing, Agent, 20 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.

THE YOUNG MAN OF FORTUNE TO-DAY.

By Russell Sage.

A young man has more chances in this world to-day than young men had when I was a boy.

The boy that is climbing the ladder is helped along in a thousand ways that he was not sixty years ago.

RUSSELL SAGE.

Willing hands are stretched out on every side to assist him.

If a young fellow is bright, and not afraid of work, and willing to keep sweet and clean, he will get on.

I know New York. I have seen it grow! Of course I have been particularly interested in the business end. Why, more than a half century ago I was hustling in the interest of the county up in Troy. There is a nice town for you! There was a default on there who got away with the money belonging to the county. I was employed to straighten it out, and I did. I got the money and returned it to the county. The personal satisfaction that I experienced at that time was an encouragement to me. I have served the city, the State and the nation since, but I do not remember of any time when I was more delighted at the success with which my endeavors were met than at that time. Young man, you keep straight, and your own conscience will be your encouragement and your help!

From the country, are you! Just beginning in the city? Then you don't know your opportunities. Yes, if a boy will only tend to succeed and be honest and true he will succeed.

I was in Congress two years. There is a hard place and one demanding character. That was a long time ago. I was right-hand man to the Ways and Means Committee then. They depended upon me for many things. The men of a later generation, like Dingley and others, who have been on that committee were children almost then.

I am over eighty, and I have worked hard, but I feel as young to-day as I did the day that I was sixty. I will tell you the secret of a happy, contented, interested old age. Keep in the harness! That is it! Keep right after your business, whatever it is. As long as a man tends to business he will have a clear head, a light heart and will be as spry as the rest of them till he is old as I am. It keeps the mind busy and the body strong.

Keep your eyes open, work hard, be patient, serve others when you can, and always live as far below your receipts as you can. Be temperate and you will find that the strength is not so hard after all.

HOW NATURE MAKES SILVER.

The process by which nature forms her silver mines is very interesting. It must be remembered that the earth's crust is full of water, which percolates everywhere through the rocks, making solutions of elements obtained from them. These solutions take up small particles of precious metals which they find here and there.

Sometimes the solutions in question are hot, the water having got so far down as to be set boiling by the internal heat of the globe. Then they rush upward, picking up the bits of metal as they go. Naturally, heat assists the performance of this operation.

Now and then the streams thus formed, perpetually flowing hither and thither below the ground, pass through cracks or cavities in the rocks, where they deposit their loads of silver. This is kept up for a great length of time—perhaps thousands of years—until the pocket is filled up.

KING GEORGE'S GOLDEN FLOOR.

King George II. was once invited out to dine with a wealthy and eccentric old duke, who possessed more money than he very well knew what to do with. Upon this occasion, wishing to impress his Majesty with the immensity of his riches, he had the floor of the dining hall paved from end to end with sovereigns, the heads being up. Each coin was stuck in a miniature of lime, which soon dried, leaving the precious "tile" securely fastened. When the king arrived, and was shown what had been done in his honor, his amazement knew no bounds, but it was with difficulty he could be persuaded to set foot upon the golden floor.

DEFECTIVE ART.

A German scientist, after making a careful scrutiny of the works of the old masters, has announced that they invariably painted the wings of angels, the wrong place, Rubens, Raphael, Corregio and Michael Angelo, he says, were ignorant of the elementary principles of science, and simply made fools of themselves by painting angels' wings at the shoulder blades.

Nature, says this critic, has placed wings in all creatures that fly exactly in the centre of gravity. This is obviously the right place for them, and nature never made a mistake.

A TALK TO ALL HOPELESS MEN.

By Mrs. Ballington Booth.

The first prison that I visited in this country was Sing Sing, and I knew nothing then of what is called "the prison problem." Anything that I have learned of it since I have learned from my boys. I only knew on that first visit when I looked down into the faces of the audience before me that I saw written there hopelessness and longing. I knew that in the future there might be a retrieving of the past by a brave manly struggle to regain the self-respect which many of them seemed to think had gone forever.

In ten State prisons there are 3,000 men wearing the little badge which says: "Look up and hope." There is a fight to be fought and a victory to be won. And the battle must be begun within the prison walls.

Many men have said to me: "I am going to do right as soon as I get out." If the resolve is worth making it is worth making now. If the battle is worth winning it is worth winning now. Don't wait until you get out to be free. There are fetters stronger than iron, there are prisons more confining than these walls.

It is the binding of the soul by some vice or some weakness that makes men prisoners, and there are many men walking about the streets who are more absolutely bound than a man chained in a prison cell.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH.

One of the things that I have set myself to fight is the word "ex-convict." That is a cruel, unjust, un-American word. When a man is suffering the penalty of his crimes he is a convict, but when he has made his reparation to society how cruel it is to call him an ex-convict. The moment he has served his sentence he is a free man and no one has the right to attach that stigma to him.

I will go from Christian church to Christian church until this wrong is righted, and I will appeal to the hearts of all Christian people to help make a chance for those who have been in prison. In the Volunteers we never use that phrase. We have a much better one, I think. We call the men who have been released from prison "graduates."

For they are graduates, for surely this is the hardest school in which men can learn the world's hard lessons.

I told my husband once that I could never enter a prison again until it was possible for me to do something for the man who has served his time and is trying to lead an upright life. I know what that means. I know of the scores of the world, of the efforts to "train" men back to prison and of the barriers that are raised on every side against the man who is trying to do right.

I have even had men come into my office in New York City faint with hunger, who have tried to gain an honest livelihood actually to the point of starvation. I am glad to say that now we are able to do something for these men in a practical way. We have established in New York City, in Chicago and at Flushing, L. I., what we have called "Hope Halls." We have one rule about these institutions, and that is that no one who has not served a term in prison can enter the door.

The reporters have come to me and said: "We should like to see your Hope Hall and have our artists make some sketches of it."

And I have replied: "I am sorry, gentlemen, but as you have not served a term in prison, I am compelled to refuse your admission."

The detectives have come there, too, and have said they would like to talk to me about some of the men there. I have told them that they might see me at my office, but that that house belonged to my boys and they could not enter. No detective has ever learned one word from my lips about any man who has ever come to us or who has ever trusted me with his confidence. That is not my business.

This is how the Hope Hall in each city is chosen and fitted up. A house is chosen in the pleasantest locality obtainable and furnished as prettily and tastefully as possible, so as to remind the man who once had a home and the days when he had a mother, not perhaps a wife and children, and to surround the man who had never known home influences with the best that were to be had.

Any man who comes to Hope Hall is welcome to stay there until we have found him permanent employment.

BRITAIN'S LONLIEST SPOT.

The most isolated spot in the British Empire—that Empire on which the sun never sets—is Tristan da Cunha, a volcanic island 1,750 miles from the Cape of Good Hope and 1,300 away from St. Helena, the nearest point of land.

While Napoleon was a prisoner on St. Helena the British Government maintained a garrison on Tristan.

His death made the garrison unnecessary, and the soldiers left, with the exception of Corporal William Glass, his family and two privates. The privates married Glass's daughters, and the present population of eighty-four people consists mainly of women.

The court decided to continue the case until Oct. 6, warning Robinson never again to enter Newton Centre and to conduct himself properly.

—The following named pupils in the Mason district have not been absent from school during the year: Marjorie Sworer, Helen Fish, Sarah Stephenson, Prescott Bate, Hylton Bravo, Ethel Read, Frank Woodman, Edward Burke, Clarence Hookridge, Anna Sauer, Leslie Woodman, Annie Campbell, Erving Burns, Wallace Ireland, Alice Johnson, Arthur Harrington, Alan Graham, Harold White, Elsie Rhodes, Carol Anderson, Priscilla Vachon, Ruth Ireland, Eva Mawhiney. —The ladies of the First Baptist church having in charge the work of the "Mothers Rest" now established in Waban, wish to tender their most hearty thanks to the many friends of the enterprise who have so generously contributed to its success.

The "Mothers Rest" has already given a most refreshing and congenial to twenty-three mothers and thirty-six children. Thursday afternoon of each week has been set aside as the regular visiting day, when anyone interested may see clothing and other articles. At present the greatest need seems to be a sufficient number of high chairs for the accommodation of so many little children. Clothing for babies and little ones under four years of age. Clothing suitable for the mothers themselves, many of whom are not sufficiently supplied for their comfort during the warm weather. Also small wares, pins, needles, safety pins, tape, etc., would be most helpful to the nurse in charge at the home. Each mother with her little children under four years has two weeks' rest and breathing space here among us, and much may be done for her help and comfort throughout the year during the short time, and when it is known that these mothers come not from one small part of Boston, but from Stamford street, Harvard street, the Baptist Bethel, in the North end, Ruggles street, in the South end, and from Jamaica Plain, the scope of the work may be better understood. Clothing or any of the articles mentioned may be sent to the Baptist chapel (between the hours of five and seven on Friday afternoons), and will be most gratefully accepted.

Justice in Haiti.

Judicial procedure in Haiti is in certain instances not untouched by humor. A Haitian owed a trader $28. A judgment requiring the Haitian to pay $4 a week into court was given, and the trader was to send a messenger every week to the magistrate for the money. In due time he sent for the first installment and was informed that the Haitian had not paid up, but that he should be thrown into prison for his failure.

Three weeks passed with the same result. One morning the Haitian came to the trader's store. He was, he said, a poor man, much married, a man to whom, therefore, expense came. What good, he asked, would accrue to the trader if he, the poor man, was thrown into prison? Let the trader forgive him his debt and earn thereby untold rewards in a future state.

After some talk the trader gave him a letter of remission, which he went off to present to the magistrate. The affair was settled, but the Haitian was struck by the bad grace with which the magistrate dismissed him, and he forthwith returned to the trader and asked him if he had received the $8 he had already paid into court. The trader looked surprised and said he had received nothing.

"Then, since you have remitted the debt, that $8 is mine," said the Haitian.

Accordingly, he went off to the court to present his claim. The magistrate at once committed him to prison. A consul who had heard the story asked the magistrate what the Haitian was sent to prison for.

"For contempt of court," was the reply.

The First Cookbook.

To the Romans belong the honor of having produced the first European cookery book, and though the authorship is uncertain, it is generally attributed to Caelius Apicius, who lived under Trajan, 114 A. D. Here are two recipes from this ancient collection:

"First, for a sauce to be eaten with boiled fowl, put the following ingredients into a mortar: Aniseed, dried mint and lazer root; cover them with vinegar, add dates and pour in liquamen (a distilled liquor made from large fish which were salted and allowed to turn putrid in the sun), oil and a small quantity of mustard seeds. Reduce all to a proper thickness with sweet wine warmed, and then pour this same over your chicken, which should previously be boiled in aniseed water."

The second recipe shows the same queer mixture of ingredients: "Take a wheelbarrow of rose leaves and pound in a mortar; add to it brains of two pigs and two thrushes boiled and mixed with the chopped up yolk of egg, oil, vinegar, pepper and wine. Mix and pour these together and stew them steadily and slowly till the perfume is developed."—Chambers' Journal.

One Franc a Shot.

When the siege of Paris began and festive little parties of overconfident inhabitants of the city swarmed into the suburbs to see the French outposts, there was among the latter a good deal of rivalry in the trade of laying down rugs and tarpaulins for those civilian sharpshooters who bought shots at a franc a shot at the enemy's outposts.

Surgeon General Gordon, who represented the medical department of the British army during the war, speaks, in a book he wrote, of the French outposts making as much as 40 or 50 francs a day each by crying out, "Shots at the enemy—1 franc!" hundreds of their customers being women. One village, soon to be ravaged by fire and the sword, was like a fair, and the sentries could not sell shots fast enough, for a rich Paris tradesman was standing by offering heavy money prizes for the civilian marksmen who brought down German sentries.—New York Times.

A Woman's Rights Person.

An old Virginia gentleman arose in a car the other day and with a great flourish of his slouch hat offered his seat to a beautiful and handsomely dressed woman.

"Take my seat, madam," he politely requested. The lady demurred. "Take my seat, I beg of you, madam," he insisted. "I could not allow a lady to stand, unless," he added under his breath, "she was one of those women's rights persons."

The lady bristled visibly. "I," she said in a freezing tone—"I am a woman's rights person."

"Take my seat just the same, madam," said the gallant old gentleman smilingly. "You are too good looking to be suspected of it if you hadn't confessed."—Leslie's Weekly.

One Too Many For Him.

"Ha, ha! They served that fellow right," exclaimed Mrs. Henpeck as she finished reading the report of a bigamy case.

"What is it, my dear?" asked her husband.

"He was arrested and very promptly jailed because he took one wife too many."

"Heavens! I wonder if they'll be after me next?"—Philadelphia Press.

Easily Forgotten.

"Can't you remember the principal acts of your various mayors?" asked the man who was trying to compile a history of the city.

"Not very well," apologetically replied the old citizen. "Our mayors are so short lived, you know, they don't make much impression on the memory. They go in one year and out the other."—Chicago Tribune.

The Very Reason.

"Dolly, what made you have lilies on your hat? They'll be out of style in a few weeks."

"How funny you are, Polly! You asked me a question and then answered it yourself."—Chicago Record.

The committee of citizens having the matter in charge consists of Mr. Charles Mills, chairman, Mr. John Temperley, Mr. J. J. Mahoney and Mr. Wm. Hopkins. They have consulted with the Metropolitan Park Commissioners and latter have granted a site on the Park Reservation just below the Eliot street bridge. As soon as the landscape artist of the commission has selected the exact site, work will be commenced on the building which will be 12 feet by 35 feet and will contain about 30 lockers. Contractor Chesley is now dredging the river under supervision of the Park Commission so that this result will be accomplished which has been needed for some time past. The committee report the results of the canvass for funds thus far has been very encouraging and an effort will be made in the next week to see those who have not already been approached. A meeting of the committee will be held at the home of Mr. Mills this evening at which time arrangements will be made concerning the building and the collection of subscriptions.

HIS FAREWELL SERMON.

REV. F. B. HORN BROOKS'S PARTING WORDS TO CHANNING CHURCH PEOPLE.

Mark, 6: 31. "And Jesus said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat."

We are inclined to think, with the consent of modern times, that the idea of the need of occasional rest is one that belongs to our century. Perhaps in some respects this is true; it may be that the very rapidity of our movements, the complications of our modern lives, have awakened a sense of the need of occasional rest as it has never been awakened before. But in fact there is nothing new in it. We only need to turn to the pages of the Old Testament—a book more forgotten than it ought to be; a book which like Plato, often strikes one with a sense of its nearness to modern things and to modern thought—we only need to turn to it in order to realize that this thought of the need of occasional rest is thousands of years old. The Jewish lawgivers felt the full necessity of it. The appointment of the Sabbath, whether it was original with the Jew or not, is a matter of no consequence, but the setting apart of one day in a week as a sacred day and as a day of rest from all work, was an indication of the sense of the need of rest now and then. And it must be noticed what is very often forgotten—that the Jew did not make of the Sabbath a work day, nor a gloomy day, but he made it one of the brightest seasons of his life, the time when all the cares of the household were thrown aside, the time when no work was allowed to any one, not even to the stranger within his gates, not even to the serving man or the serving woman; all on that day found their rest. It is a strange perversion of the idea of the day that we find laws against idleness, and that we have made it a day of idleness, not one, but that we are not at all rigorous with regard to allowing men and women to work all the days of the week, even for providing our trivial wants. It has so happened in the course of time that we have forgotten that the commandment for the Sabbath was not a commandment to refrain from innocent amusement and enjoyment, but from work. Today we make our laws against innocent amusement, and allow all kinds of work to go on with impunity.

But however it may be, it shows that there was in the sense of those men of old time a feeling of the need of rest. And this feeling went further and deeper. The Sabbath or the Sunday has become part of the civilization of the world; it has entered into its life. But there was another commandment which these old lawgivers gave that has not been so generally observed. Perhaps it never was. Perhaps the necessities of their lives and the necessities of the lives of the people to whom they gave the law, made it impossible. There is in the Old Testament, in the laws that we find there, an enactment of what is called a Sabbath year. Once in seven years—not only once in seven years, but once in seven years—the whole land was to have a rest. The agriculturalist must refrain from working the soil, all kind of work, so far as it was possible, must be laid aside, in order that there might be an opportunity for the recuperation of all the powers of their lives. I say I do not suppose it was ever carried out, but the thought of it is in some measure carried out in our modern times. You find that in our great colleges, where ever it is possible, once in seven years the professor is released from his labor and allowed to take rest which comes by change and a different occupation. And perhaps it might be well if nowadays people were enabled to take one year in seven and make it a year when they would not be striving to make all the money they could or carry on life at a high pressure, but to make it an opportunity for the recuperation of all the powers of their lives. I say I do not suppose it was ever carried out, but the thought of it is in some measure carried out in our modern times.

And then in the life of Jesus you find the exemplification of the need of occasional rest. Of course, being a Jew, he kept the Sabbath. His official life was full of activity; the multitudes were ever pressing upon him. The demands of his life were so incessant that there was scarcely time, the gospel tells, for him to eat. And I think there is nothing in the gospel story which better reveals the essential humanity of Jesus than the glimpse that we get of him in the account that he had leisure, no, not to eat, and in the gospel of John, that he sat "thus wearied by the well." He knew weariness, he knew what incessant working was, and he knew what it was to have no time for rest. And so it is that he says to his disciples, "Come ye apart and rest a while."

And if we look not into the past, but into the experience of our own lives, I think we shall find that this idea of occasional rest is almost imperative for the full development of our powers for becoming and doing what we ought to become and to do. The man of busy activity, the man who is always occupied with the affairs of life, is very apt by the very stress of his activity to imagine that the things he is doing are the essential and important things. He is apt to get into the habit of acting simply for the sake of acting. What was originally an impulse in his nature, an inspiration from some high source, a conscious commandment of God, has become simply a desire for incessant activity. He goes on day after day, year after year, busily occupied with the things with which he is entrusted, and from that very fact he becomes unaware of the spring of action, of his dependence on the One from whom these commands do proceed. It is said by some commentators of Milton's "Paradise Lost" that Satan was so busy, occupied with doing the work that God had called him to do, that he forgot his relationship to God and his dependence upon him and imagined he was doing it all. It is very likely to be so with the one who never takes a moment to think and to realize the things of life. At some time he must have been conscious of some commandment of God to do the work that he is doing, and he has gone on so busily doing it year after year that he forgets that God has called him to do it, and all the glory and all the beauty of it has faded out of sight. What was once a great joyous impulse of obedience to the commandment of God has degenerated into the noisy routine of habit.

And so it is well that one takes time in these seasons of rest to recall the sources upon which he depends, the springs of action which make all action possible, and to realize the glory and the dignity of his work by seeing how it is related to the life of the Highest. Then drudgery becomes divine; then the busy cares of life have a meaning, however small the things about which they are occupied. It is well that we have these seasons of rest. The man working, it may be, for his family—and there can be nothing better and nobler than that—may become so engrossed in his work for his family that he forgets all about the tenderer and truer relations in which he ought to stand to that family. The man who is working for some great cause may forget its greatness because he never dwells upon it and never thinks about it. It is a good thing that one now and then can simply sit down and ask himself, "Why am I doing this work of mine? Is it worth doing or is it not? For whom am I doing it, and why am I doing it?" When thus in his rest time he asks that question he begins to see something more in life than its activity. There is no real activity that is not awakened and kept alive by the thought of what makes it worth having.

And then again there is another thing that rest does for the mind, and that is, it opens the mind to the good that is in the world. A great many of us are like people who pass through a country on an express train. One object whirrs by after another, and at the end of the day we have gone far but we have seen nothing. If we have traveled as the late John McKinstry says people ought to travel—by stage coach—or, if, better still, we have walked quietly through those countries, we shall see them in all the fullness of their beauty. Sometimes day after day is so filled with busy activity that we do not see the beauty about us; we are absorbed in our cares and we do not realize that the world has something for us better than anything we can ever get by our always constant striving. I think it was Wordsworth who spoke the true word about the use of rest when he said to cultivate "a wise passiveness." Sometimes the best thing we can do to take in the beauty and the glory of the world about us, to absorb the sweet "influences of the sky" is simply to be still and let nature work its result upon our being. Then it is that it is full of healing balm; then we take in all that it has to impart. "Blessed is the man who has leisure to be wise."

And so it is in regard to the thought of God for us. This life of God ever seeks to fill the world, ever seeks to take possession of us, and if we are quiet we are like the waters of some still lake that reflect the glory and the beauty of the heavens. It was the words of the Psalmist, "Be still, and know that I am God." Sometimes we chase after the truth with frantic striving and outcry, when, if we remained still and allowed the truth to find us, it would come to our hearts and abide there. And that, I think, as much as anything else, is what we need in our seasons of cessation from labor—to be willing to rest, to be willing to let the things without, the beautiful world in which we live and all its choicest influences, make their impression upon us.

And then again there comes through this occasional rest time to reflect on the meaning of our experiences. We sometimes wonder why some people seem to have more valuable experiences than others—why they learn more from them and have more to tell us about them. I think the answer lies in that these people have more leisure to wait and to be quiet in order that the meaning of their experiences may make some impression upon them. If one experience is rapidly followed by another, the experience of one man or woman has as much to teach as the experience of another man or woman. Our experiences, so far as that is concerned, are practically equal. The difference lies in whether the man or woman reflects upon his or her experience, and the other has not time for it. Instead of reflecting, he is adding a new experience.

Sometimes a man who has passed through life like Napoleon—who is in exile and compelled to reflect upon his experiences, realizes the lessons of them and the meaning of them as he never did before. Sometimes in his last illness or in the dying moments of his life, a man or woman has a significance that it never had before. There are lessons revealed that are clear as sunlight, and one says, "Why didn't I see it at the time?" And that may be true of the work of the world. The Sabbath is not to think as we do think in these hours of enforced rest, or in the hour when the world is fading from our sight.

But above all, this occasional rest is the means of fitting us for better work in the future. A wise man said a few years ago, "I can do twelve months' work in eleven months, but I cannot do it in twelve." The constant strain and tension of the mind defeat themselves. What one does in the time he ceases to do with energy. It is not the number of hours that we work in the day that counts, but the number of hours that we work with mind and energy. We are apt to think that the time we spend in rest is time wasted; it is really time gained. The hours that Jesus spent alone in prayer to God, when he was in the wilderness, his activities of life, were not wasted hours; they were hours that prepared him to go forth to do mightier work than otherwise he could have done. The land of Israel in the thought of the great lawgivers was not to be uncultivated for one year in seven simply that it might be uncultivated, but their thought was that by the lying of the land in a fallow condition for one year the successful years would bring more abundant crops. The men who have rested on Sunday and refrained from the busy activities of life are the men who in the long run have done the greatest amount of work in the world. The Sabbath is to be observed not simply because it is a divine commandment written in a book, but because it is a commandment written into the necessities of human nature. So the value of rest is in order that we may work more heartily and more earnestly in the days to come. The rest time is also the work time in the truest sense of the word.

I have spoken thus this morning because it is the end of our church year. We are soon to be scattered abroad in different places, to take our rest, and I have sought to indicate the ways in which the most perfect rest might be gained, and the meaning and the necessity of this summer rest. It is a true instinct of human nature that leads us to act as we do in the present time. Only we ought to act more wisely and with a deeper thought than we often do. We should be separated from one another, and yet wherever we go let us hope that we shall find the rest that will enable us to understand our dependence upon the eternal source of things, the rest which shall open our mind to all forms of good, the rest which may awaken our minds and hearts to the realization of the meaning of the experiences that we have had. And I cannot forget, as you cannot forget, that perhaps for the last time I shall speak to you in this place. The years that are past have been very busy years to me—years of care and thought.

I do not think that there has been the rest in them that there ought to have been or that I might have taken. I wish I could have followed the counsel that I have been giving this morning, but the fact is that for twenty years, with the exception of a few months last summer, I have been within the reach of the call of any one within my parish for any occasion; that hardly a Sunday has passed when I have not preached; that hardly a day has passed that I have not been planning the work that seemed to devolve upon me. It has been a busy, active life. And the time has come when it seems to me that I must rest from it awhile—rest from it in absence from you, my people, whom I have loved so well and whom I have tried to serve. The last year has been a most arduous one. It has seemed at times as if I were hardly able to speak from this place to do the work that I ought to be doing. The strain of life has made itself felt. It is only through your kindness and forbearance that I have been able to go on thus long. Your kindness has made it possible for me to take the rest which I sorely need. I want to thank you for all your kindness and for all your goodness to me. I shall always cherish it in my heart of hearts. And I want this morning to feel that this rest is one which will be fruitful in good. God grant that in it I may have time to make clearer to my mind and heart the deep meaning of life and the clear commandments of God that I would carry out; that I may have the leisure to grow wise by opening the mind to the sources of good; that I may learn the meaning of my own experience in such a way that meaning will have a significance for me and others; and above all, that in this enforced rest I may find the strength which may fit me to labor more truly and more bravely through the years that may be given.

Lastly, I invoke the blessing of God upon this people, and ask that if in times past I have spoken any word or tried to do anything which has helped them they may take it into their hearts and carry it out in large and noble results. And if I have failed in any attempt, I pray that they at least, by their arduous effort and their earnest devotion to the cause, may make that attempt successful in days to come. May the work of this church redound through coming time to the building up of the lives of this people and to the regeneration of this community.

Delightful Ocean Trips.

There is an indescribable charm about an ocean voyage, especially to those who live inland and are not accustomed to a snuff of salt air every day. Many dream of a trip to Europe but can't afford the time or expense. The Plant Line to the Provincias offers a delightful substitute. Many a man or woman whose vacation time is limited and whose pocket-book is not over-crowded, can take a cruise on one of the steamers for the same amount that they spend for a vacation at some farm house or country resort. A fourteen hundred mile trip can be covered in less than a week and stopovers are allowed, lengthening the time two weeks or more if desired. Those wishing to practise economy, need not feel obliged to buy staterooms, as the cabin has been achieved only as the result of continued successful use. A morbid condition of the membrane in the nasal passages can be cured by this purifying and healing treatment. Sold by druggists or it will be the result of that we get the meaning of continued successful use. It has been fully demonstrated that Ely's Cream Balm is a specific for Nasal Catarrh and cold in the head. This distinction has been achieved only as the result of continued successful use. How to Spend Hot Days.

No greater mistake can be made than to look upon those as objects of pity who are busy all day in the fields in the heat. They are of all men most comfortable. Only ignorance, arising partly from inexperience, could lead any one to think otherwise or to be shut in, wandering listlessly from one stuffy room to another, thinking only of his discomfort, and how he can make himself comfortable with fans, cool drinks and inaction.

No: this is not the way to be comfortable. Go forth in the highest and loosest possible dress, and for a few hours, out of doors, and in gentle motion you are in moving air for one thing, and, for another, with thoughts diverted from how you are feeling. Our flying boys on their wheels or our runners on their feet, are doing just what we would bring about in our simple, natural, bird-like wisdom. Scouring about on their wheels, in only pants and outing shirts, blown up by air currents into little balloons, full of mischief and happy comfort, yet with hopeful promise of a good future, they have no more thought of discomfort than their feathered brothers in the tree tops whom they must love to treat as their brothers.

Years ago, in a summer in the Berkshire hills, I spent one of the hottest days roving all day by brooks and among hills and on rural roads and in making a bath tub by building a small dam in a little hidden mountain brook of pure water. Though perspiring freely all day, the constant pure, fresh breezes were only all the more delightfully cooling and refreshing, and more comfortable and have had like experiences many times since.

But if, as often in less rural regions, one must be at home, make the conditions approximate to those of the real country rest, as nearly as possible. Take books and reading—or even pea-shelling, with light talk, if it comes to that—out under shady trees, or into a breezy thicket, or by a brook, or by the sea, and I say you will be comfortable and happy. The best comfort is to be had in the wholesome stagnation and shade of the house. But if the work enforces indoor hours, let every window not facing the sun be wide open to every breeze, and think of the outing hours to come by and by.

The Late Emory Leverett Williams.

The bright career which promised for the young artist, Emory Leverett Williams, formerly of Newton, was cut short by his death in North Dakota some months ago. R. H. Russell, the art publisher, who appreciated his genius and gave him much encouragement in his work among the Indians, has ready for publication this Fall a book of Mr. Williams' drawings of the different Indian tribes, entitled "An Alphabet of Indians," showing the warriors, chiefs and squaws at their favorite amusements and pursuits. The descriptive text is written by Mrs. Williams in a naive, straightforward manner that attracts the reader and holds his interest. Mrs. Williams accompanied her husband to the West and lived with him in the very heart of the Indians, and they were adopted and truly loved by the different tribes they came to know.

Street Railway Guide.

There is no better index of the growth of the electric railway system in Eastern New England than Derrah's Official Street Railway Guide, the fifth edition of which has just been issued in a handsome new cover. From a perusal of the contents of this book it will be seen that four of the six New England States are now connected directly with Boston by trolley lines. The country is covered by a network of electric lines, with more than 1700 miles of track, an increase of more than 200 miles within the past year.

The use of the trolley lines for pleasure travel led Mr. Derrah, who is in the Street Railway Excursion business at 53 Devonshire street, Boston, to make a special study of street railway conditions and traffic and to issue this Guide. Retaining all the features which have made it popular in past years, an improvement is noted this year in the placing of the time tables in front of the descriptive matter relating to the different lines. The descriptions of trolley rides on the various lines are handsomely illustrated, the number of pictures this year being larger than ever before. There are also such special features as routes, rates of fare, distances, running times, time tables, night cars in Boston, and many other matters of interest to those who use the trolley for pleasure.

There is also a new map of the Eastern New England, showing the new and projected lines.

The Guide has the approval of the street railway managers of all lines, and is sold by newsdealers, as heretofore, at fifteen cents a copy, or will be sent by mail for twenty cents.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed yellow, also his eyes and hair. After taking two bottles of "Yellow Jaundice" he was cured. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by Arthur Hudson.

An Historic Farm.

Mr. George H. Ellis of Newton has bought the Lee farm, in Barre, from W. H. Bowker of Boston, and will take possession immediately, using it as a summer residence. This is one of the finest farms in Worcester county, and is historically noted in Barre. The original owner was Samuel Lee, brother of General Samuel Lee, who enlisted in the war of the revolution at the age of 13 years. The farm remained in the Lee family 105 years. In the early forties Daniel Webster was entertained by David Lee for several days, and the stone wall, from which the statesman addressed a crowd of Whigs from the surrounding country, is still intact.

CENTRAL VERMONT RAILWAY MAKES ROUND TRIP RATE TO FAMOUS VERMONT PEAK.

One need not perform a long journey into sparsely populated wilds to find the picturesque in American scenery. Vermont possesses natural beauties quite as perfect and attractive as any to be found in the east, and it also offers, at many points,
the wilderness, though lying almost with-
in touch of the most advanced civilization.
Such nooks and corners are the delight of mildly adventuresome people, and perhaps none of them appeal more strongly to the lover of nature than Mount Mansfield, the loftiest peak of Vermont's Green Mountains. Easily and comfortably reached from Waterbury on the main line of the Central Vermont Railway, and thence, by trolley to Stow, and by carriage to the summit, where there is a splendid hotel, Mansfield is indeed most accessible, and visitors in yearly increasing numbers are enjoying its wondrous charms. No visit to Vermont is complete without this trip,
which from Boston to Mansfield and return costs less than ten dollars. Particulars, Central Vermont office, 305 Washington St., Boston.

NEWTON LOWER FALLS.

—Fr. McLeod of St. John's church has returned from a three weeks vacation.
—The Whitney family of Wellesley Farms
are at Cottage City during this month.

—Mr. Samuel Leland and family of Chicago are spending a visit with Mrs.
Leland.
—Mr. Curtis and Miss Helen Curtis have returned from a pleasant yachting trip with friends.

—Mrs. C. H. Tainter and son are at Houghs Neck for the remainder of the summer.
—Three prostrations from heat were recorded in Weston Saturday. In two cases a physician's services were required.

—Mrs. Hobart and sister are at their cottage at Round Pond, Me., for the summer. Mr. Hobart will join the party for a short stay this week.

—A canoeing party came to grief last week when a sharp stone tore a long hole in their pleasure craft. Being near the shore they alighted without much trouble.
—The work of enlarging St. John's church is being pushed as rapidly as possible. The foundation work now being done will take some time after which the work will be much easier.

—The usual ringing of the bell in St.
Mary's church the night before the 4th,
was omitted this year. As a precaution against such a disturbance the tongue was quickly removed before these exercises were to be carried out, the new idea to put a stop to the fun was a secret unknown to the officers who kept a strict watch on everyone seen about the premises.

A French inventor has come to the relief of those who miss the sight of a horse in front when they ride in an automobile, by designing an automatic horse, which draws
the carriage after him, and can no doubt be made to switch his tail over the lines, if
that will bring comfort to the driver. —

(Special Legislative Correspondence.)

Boston, July 11.
If indications point to anything, this is the closing week of the General Court, for the Senate has practically nothing to do,
while the House is making most strenuous efforts to close up and be prorogued. After a week of uncertainty, on Monday night a vote was taken on the Boston & Albany
lease bill, which resulted in its passage to a third reading by a majority of 25. To be sure, an amendment was put on to provide that the ratification of the lease shall be submitted to the people at the coming state election, but this is not likely to stay on the document when it reaches the enactment stage. If the House itself does not take it out on the enrolling stage, the Senate will decline to agree to the amendment, and then there will be a conference committee, which will quickly decide the matter. Mr. Langford's amendment, designed to make sure that there shall be no deterioration in stations and grounds was adopted, and a roll-call was refused. It was alleged that this was an unfriendly amendment in some quarters, but it could hardly be called that, as Mr. Langford voted for the bill.

There was uncertainty in some minds
just how many men voted for the lease because every amendment, unfriendly or otherwise, which was offered was put on;
but the writer is of the opinion that the men who are against the lease voted against it, and that their votes were not affected by any amendment which was put on. Some criticized Chairman Tuttle of the railroad committee for his attitude in calling for roll-calls on every motion, but they did not realize how anxious he was to get a test
vote that would tell where the matter stood. When he found that the house refused to refer the lease over to the next general court, he was ready for a vote on its passage to another stage.

I find that I did Mr. Langford an unintentional injustice in assuming that he favored the payment of money to the French Catholic society of West Boston,
because he was not recorded as a dissenter.
He fought the measure in every way possible in the committee.

The next few days will show whether the Senate will kill the boulevard and parkway bills which the House has so freely
passed along, or whether it will pass them
and leave the payment of money to the French Catholic society of West Boston to them. They shall become laws or not. Yesterday a bill was engrossed to authorize the metropolitan park commissioners to improve the banks of the Charles river, as was one to authorize and direct the same board to require Fuller's wharf in Brighton as a part of the Charles River Reservation. The park board does not oppose any of these measures. In the case of most of them it assumes that it would be of immense advantage to have them pass; but of course
the board does not put its opinion against that of the Governor, who believes that no more expenditures should be made until
the work of payment has begun.

It is presumed it will be a month yet
before the commission appointed by the Supreme Court decides how much each city and town in the state must pay toward the year toward the parks. As soon as the commission reports, the auditor's department will notify each municipality as to its assessment, and they must be paid by Dec-10. If the sun does not go into the excess of each place, it must be borrowed and paid. The presumption is that each taxpayer will find his proportion in his annual tax bill. The bill provides that the entire state should be put into the metropolitan park district, and there will be no Legislature action to set aside the finding of the commission as was the case three years or so ago.

After many weeks of consideration, the special committee which investigated the metropolitan water board reported yesterday. The report is rather colorful. It finds that the charges of favoritism and extravagance in making settlements for property taken by the water board is not sustained, and says that the board has not violated the weekly payment law, as it was not bound by that law. It does think,
however, that the example of the board in making monthly payments to its employees
had had a bad effect on the contractors, who are bound by the laws. To make these points more effective, the report includes several bills, designed to secure weekly payments and citizens' preference in employing labor. The committee finds that the liquor laws were constantly violated at the reservoir and rather hints that the board and its officers are not perfect
in some other way, have prevented this.
No change in the personnel of the board is recommended, however.

The House yesterday referred to the next General Court, the bill to compel street railway companies shall pay five per cent. of the cost of eliminating grade crossings in certain cases.

This is rather a surprise, though of course
there was a quiet influence at work to secure it.
With two exceptions the committee on ways and means of the house has reported
in favor of a bill to authorize the metropolitan water board to acquire Fisher Hill reservoir in Brookline from the city of Boston, with certain piles and other property, the total value being it is said about $1,000,000. The district has no practical use for this stuff, but Boston does not want it, and Boston usually finds a way of getting rid of anything the Legislature will help her sell.

DAVID CITY, NEB., April 1, 1900.

Genessie, the Furber, Le Roy, J. W. L.
Gentlemen—I must say in regard to GRAIN-O that there is nothing better or healthier. We have used it for years. My brother was a great coffee drinker. He was taken sick and the doctor said he was the cause of it, and told us to use GRAIN-O. We got a package but did not like it at first, but now would not be without it. My mother has been very well since we started to use it. Yours truly,
LILLIE SOCHOR.

Visitors to Nova Scotia are advised to stop at this charming hotel at Smith's Cove, Digby county. It is a new hotel and has been built especially for the convenience of tourists. It contains all modern equipments and is surrounded by attractive grounds. Good boating, fishing and bathing at its doors. Free teams meet guests at Bear River station. White Glenbrook is the proprietor, and Mr. E.
N. Soule of Brook street will be glad to give particulars.

"Are you ready for your summer outing," asked her dearest friend. "Not quite," replied the sweet young thing. "Of course, I have my bathing suit, my bicycle suit, my golf suit, my tennis suit, my yachting suit and my riding habit, but as we are going to the sweet quiet places merely for rest and relaxation, I will, of course, have to have a few evening gowns,
and possibly half a dozen suitable for lawn parties and all that sort of thing." Thus she demonstrated that she had been there before and knew what "quiet country life"
meant in a summer resort advertisement.—

"My dear," he said, "I forgot to mail
that letter this morning." "Oh, you dear!"
she cried. "That was just what I wanted.
Now I can tell you when that supercilious Sade complains that I don't answer
her letters."—Philadelphia North American.

PRESIDENT TUCKER'S advice to the Dartmouth students to adopt politics as a business has brought out all sorts of comments, favorable and otherwise. But President Tucker must have had other ideas in mind than the men who have made their names prominent as politicians in the past few years, such as Hanna, Platt, Quay, Croker, or even Lodge and Roosevelt. The career of these men make it a question whether a man of average honesty
can be successful in politics and still retain his own self respect. He surely did not mean that his students should imitate Platt or Quay or Hanna or the others who have had to do so much of what may be politically called "dirty work" in order to succeed. Even Roosevelt with all his dash and energy has had to yield an implicit obedience to Platt, which must have been peculiarly disagreeable to a man of his character. In politics, as in everything else,
a man must pay the price in order to be successful, and it has seemed that of late years the price was too high. Practical politics is something very different from the ideals that college professors have of it, and to make it his chief business, a man must be willing to get rid of most of what men have been taught to value.
Every man should take an active interest
in politics and should take the time and trouble to think for himself, but to devote to it his whole life is another thing. The view of such a man as ex-Speaker Reed would be of value on this question, as he has tried it up. He managed to retain the respect of the people, but it is more than suspected that he found the price he would have to pay for continued success was higher than he wished to pay. It is doubtful if President Tucker would point to any of our prominent politicians who have made politics a business and say that they were worthy of imitation. Success has been their aim and most of them let nothing stand in the way. Men of high character do succeed sometimes, so there is hope for the future, but at present
with too many of them the end sought,
which is their own success, justifies any means to secure it.

The Boston Globe had a two column
article on Monday in regard to the meeting of Mr. Powers' friends in this Congressional district, last week. The picture that accompanied the sketch was labelled so that the friends of the candidate could recognize it, but otherwise it was not a success. The meeting was successful in every way, however, and included about every prominent Republican leader in the district. The sentiment was all one way, whether the speakers were from Middlesex
or Norfolk or Suffolk counties. Col.
Benton, Hon. Eben S. Draper, Mr. E. L.
Pickard, Mr. M. J. Murray, ex-Senator
Darling, Richard F. Andrews, Frank W.
Powers of Dedham, and representatives of about every town in the district except Brookline were heard from, and they all agreed that Mr. Powers was the only candidate who was "in it" this year. Col.
Benton served notice that the committee proposed to make a "dig" out at the same time, a most vigorous canvas. Mr.
Pickard in speaking for Newton said that this city would be a unit for him in the caucuses, and would give him a tremendous majority at the polls. He added that "the citizens of Newton know and appreciate him and will do all in their power to secure his nomination."

The Wards One and Seven aldermen were very popular men before the Read fund picnic. It is said that their houses were surrounded with children all day Sunday and that one of them had to summon the police to prevent his house being carried off bodily, in the rush for tickets. Evidently Norumbega Park is a popular place with the children, and those in the two wards were the envy of the whole city. It is even said that there was a thriving trade done in tickets by some of the youngsters who put business before pleasure, and that they made "heaps" of money out of the popular demand. However, it was a very enthusiastic crowd that went to the park and may be the attendants,
the special policemen and the city fathers
who went along were not a tired set when night came.

The gossips were taken aback the other day by seeing Mr. E. L. Pickard go into the mayor's office at City Hall. The news spread rapidly but nothing out of the ordinary occurred and the two gentlemen were seen conversing pleasantly together, as if there were no such thing as rival candidates for the mayoralty. No one seems to know just what was said and possibly they talked about the weather, or some other topic of interest to both. In the midsummer dullness, it is such little incidents that are seized upon to make something interesting to speculate about.

The absentees escaped two terribly hot days last Saturday and Sunday, when the mercury was above ninety and the air felt like the inside of a steam laundry. Such weather, fortunately, does not last long,
and since then we have had regular mountain weather, with nights almost too cool to sit out-of-doors. The stay-at-homes are very comfortable most of the time, and stories from some of the summer resorts
testify that the hot wave was as bad there as in Newton.

ON another page will be found Rev. F. B.
Hornbrook's farewell sermon to the people of Channing church. It was delivered extemporaneously, and taken down in shorthand by Mr. Frank H. Bart, who has kindly written it out for the GRAPHIC. It was an eloquent discourse, and Mr. Hornbrook's many friends in Newton will be glad to have his parting words in permanent form.

THE Boston & Albany lease bill has finally passed the Legislature, with the usual startling changing of votes, and soon
the New York Central will have charge of Massachusetts' best railroad. Adjournment will come soon as there will be no
good in staying now that the important matters have been disposed of.

Mr. W. F. HUESTIS gives an interesting account in this issue of the adventures of the ship Corwin, on the voyage from Seattle to Cape Nome. His many friends in Newton will be glad to hear from him.

Stolen Wheels.

In the last few weeks a large number of bicycles have been stolen in various parts of the city. In a majority of the cases the machines have been found by the police in some out-of-the-way place, where they had been left, and have been returned to their owners. As yet, however, not a bicycle thief has been arrested this year. Most of the thefts occur in the evening. Wednesday evening, Carrier Sweeney of the Newtonville postoffice lost a valuable wheel, which he had left for a few moments in front of the postoffice.

The Church Canvass.

The church canvass recently made in Newton by Miss Mary L. Spear in behalf of the pastors, has been completed, and the report of this visitor was submitted last week. The object of this canvass was twofold, viz., to extend a hearty personal invitation to all strangers in this part of the city, to the various church services and Sunday school, and also to find out how largely the habit of church and Sunday school attendance obtained in this community.

The report contained some interesting facts. Of the 308 families visited, whose names were not upon the pastoral directories of the several churches, only 106
were not in some way actively identified with a church home, and nearly all of these expressed a preference for a special church, but for various reasons had not attended
its services.

The names of all such as of late have come into our part of the city, have been given to the respective ministers, who will soon call upon them at their homes.
The religious preferences were widely divergent, some thirteen in all, ranging from current Christian beliefs to theosophy
and atheism; the latter two, however, were represented only by a single individual each. Over half a hundred families go to church in Boston, and the children in all but thirty-eight homes, were more or less connected with resident Sunday schools, while comparatively few families of individuals not over twenty-five, acknowledged indifference or alienation to the churches.

The reception of the visitor was with hardly an exception, most kindly and cooperative, and not least among the results of this canvass will be the cordial and personal invitation which has been left in these homes by this courteous and sympathetic representative of our Newton
churches.

That Reservoir Sale.

To the Editor of the Graphic:
The leading editorial of your last issue,
entitled "A Curious Proposition," leaves
the impression that the Board of Aldermen have either definitely decided upon or are seriously considering the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of the old reservoir in the manner so severely criticised by you.
As this is not the fact and as the matter in question is of the highest importance, it is fair that there should not be any misapprehension on the part of the citizens as to the real situation.

The proposed sale of the old reservoir to the Metropolitan Water Commission was first brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen on the Mayor's call for the special meeting held on the 2d ult. Under the call for that meeting nothing could be considered by the board save the acceptance or rejection of the $50,000 offer for the reservoir. If the board voted to authorize the sale, it could not make any disposition of the proceeds until the 10th of September. Meantime the amount to be raised by taxation is determined, and the proceeds of the reservoir will be used, as the proceeds of the poor farm were used a year ago, to reduce the tax rate this year.

The mayor and the aldermen are agreed
as to the advisability of selling the reservoir to the Metropolitan Water Commission
upon the terms proposed. But they differ as to the disposition of the proceeds. The mayor wants them for current expenses. It is stated that he desires to pay them into the Water Sinking Fund, though how this can be done in the absence of a vote of the board has not been explained, and even if it can the effect is to reduce the tax rate
this year and possibly next for the benefit of this year's tax payer, but by diminishing
the plant of the city and by the use of an asset for which the tax payers of the past twenty-five years have been paying.

The aldermen, on the other hand, are solidly against this disposition of the proceeds. They do not believe in selling the assets of the city to pay current expenses. In their judgment that would be indecently financing. They want the proceeds for permanent investment.

For just what permanent investment,
whether the water construction account,
the new hospital building, the land for a school house and fire engine house at Chestnut Hill, the furnishing of the new Bigelow school, or other similar investment, has been talked over by different members of the board, but no official action
thereon has been taken by any committee
of the board, or by the board itself.
At the meeting of the board in question
for reasons already stated they were obliged to adjourn without taking any action, except approving the project of the sale and requesting committee action.

At the next meeting of the board on September 10, an order authorizing the sale,
together with such recommendation as it might deem expedient as to the disposition of the proceeds. The city solicitor has given it as his opinion that this resolution
does not take of the $50,000 an estimated receipt, so that this year's tax levy must be made up as the board believe it should be made up, without employing the $50,000 to defray the bill. The Metropolitan Water Commission have agreed to hold their offer
open till the fall, when the city can accept it, if it sees fit, so that nothing has been lost by the delay, and a long step has been taken towards sound finance, and, for that matter, good government.

One farcical incident, connected with the controversy, is his honor the mayor's recommendation of an appropriation of $10,000 to meet this year's Metropolitan Park assessment. He included this item in his call for the special meeting. As, however, he did not get the $50,000, so that the amount might be counted as an estimated receipt, he vetoed the order which the board had humbly passed at his solicitation, thus slaying his own child. He gives as his reason: "My message to your board on July 2
was based upon a necessarily hasty investigation. No official notice of the assessment has been received, and it is quite possible that the estimate may be excessive. I am informed by the city assessor that if it becomes necessary to pay the amount during the present financial year
he believes he will be able to meet the whole or a large part, at least, of the same,
from receipts beyond previous estimates,
and not otherwise appropriated. Under the circumstances I deem it advisable that no appropriation should be made until the definite amount is ascertained."

It may be deduced from the information of those whom it concerns, that the bonds issued by the city are not, and never have been, mortgage bonds. They, therefore,
do not constitute a lien upon the property
of the water department, or of any other property of the city. It may be that the disposition suggested by your editorial is a proper one. But it should not be forgotten that a consistent policy of permitting the least possible increase of the city's debt
and of paying as you go, even for permanent improvements so far as that can be done without materially increasing the tax rate or pressing valuations, is the only policy which will give in the end relief to the tax payer. And if this is so, it may be questioned whether the new contagious ward should be paid for by borrowed money, when the city is in financial straits
from the sale of the reservoir and the proceeds are not all needed at present and will not for some time to come be needed for water construction.

The steamer Yarmouth of the Yarmouth line made a new record on July 6, on which date she carried just 500 passengers from Boston to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Travel on the Yarmouth line steamer, which

Thursday and Friday at 2 p. m., has immensely increased since the rates to Yarmouth were reduced. Persons bound for south shore resorts, including Scarborough, Liverpool, Lunenburg and Halifax, should take the Yarmouth line steamer leaving Boston on Friday. Close and sure connections are made at Yarmouth with the steamer City of Montreal, which leaves Yarmouth every Saturday morning for these south shore ports. Additional information and tickets may be obtained at

GROWING IN POPULARITY.

The daily ocean trips from Boston to Provincetown on board the big staunch and commodious steamer Nantucket of the

with each successive excursion. Wednesday a number of the Cuban teachers took in the trip and expressed the utmost appreciation of the sail down and back, as well as the pilgrimage on shore at the tip of the Cape.

To them, as indeed to many of the other excursionists, the sights and scenes in the quaint old whaling town were a positive

PAPA WAS THE ONLY ONE TO WHOM IT MADE NO DIFFERENCE.

"I was on a train coming east not long ago," said a government official to a Washington Star reporter, "and I struck up an acquaintance with a little girl about 7
years of age, who was travelling with her aunt. She was from the West, but had passed the greater part of her life in Boston, and was most thoroughly Bostonian
in her mannerisms, but none the less interesting on that account. I had spoken to her of my own little girl, about her age, being in North Carolina.
"Do you think," she said, in her elaborate manner, "that the altitude is proper there?"
"I said I thought it was about right."
"I had thought it was too low, perhaps,"
she went on, "but I suppose you know best. With us, aunt and I—and she said
"aunt" in real Bostonese—prefer the lower altitudes and are going to Boston. Mamma and brother prefer the higher altitudes
and are going to the mountains, or rather they have already gone."
"And your father?" I asked. "Where does he go?"
"Oh," she exclaimed in quite a hopeless
tone, "he has been all refined; any kind of an altitude suits him."

THE ADVENTUROUS VOYAGE OF THE SHIP CORWIN FROM SEATTLE.

Nome, Alaska, June 12, 1900.
To the Editor of the Graphic:

I dare say many Newton people are interested in the adventures of the good ship Corwin and the Corwin Trading Company, and I am sure that a letter in the GRAPHIC will reach them all. The delays incident upon fitting out a vessel for a long voyage kept us in Seattle until well into May and it was on the evening of the 15th that the welcome farewell whistle was blown and the moorings cast off. Loaded to the limit with all sorts of goods, her deck piled high with coal in bags and with eight horses stabled in her fore hold in close but comfortable quarters the Corwin steamed down the bay in a wonderful sunset glow that the wise ones said foretold good luck, a prediction on the whole amply verified so far. At Port Townsend we docked overnight, passed the custom house, took on board a big scow for a lighter at Nome and steamed away the next afternoon, with our good friend Plummer, the Seattle photographer, doing the lightning act in taking successive pictures of the ship and people as they sailed away. Port Townsend is a dead town, the corpse of a bustling boom, but it galvanized itself into life for a moment as we left and bade us farewell with a crowded dock and the toot of steam whistles.

Then came the beauties of the inside passage, with its narrow water ways between rugged fir-clad hills and an occasional breeze from old ocean where we passed the island passages. Here some of the Corwin's crew, who were hanging in hot haste and the pumps were manned and the boats cleared away and some lowered to be in readiness for leaving the ship. One or two men appeared with life preservers on their heads, and some white faces. There was little confusion, however, and all hands worked with feverish energy. It was thought that the ship would have to be beached at best, but it was found that the pumps kept the water down and were even making it less. The ship was therefore headed for Safety Cove on Calvert Island and came to anchor there unhurt. It was later found that the lights were small ones caused by holes made by the government inspectors when the vessel was on the ways at Ballard and negligently left unplugged by the dock yard men. The water had leaked into the space between the inner and outer skin of the vessel and was released by the rolling motion.

It was really a slight matter and was fixed without difficulty as the vessel lay at anchor. In this work we learned, too, the tremendous staunchness of the Corwin which has since been proven in bucking the ice of the Arctic seas.

At Seymour Narrows we made the passage through the swift and dangerous tide rips in safety though the ship was twice caught and whirled back like a cork. The third time we caught, the tide was running in hot haste and the pumps were manned and the boats cleared away and some lowered to be in readiness for leaving the ship. One or two men appeared with life preservers on their heads, and some white faces. There was little confusion, however, and all hands worked with feverish energy. It was thought that the ship would have to be beached at best, but it was found that the pumps kept the water down and were even making it less. The ship was therefore headed for Safety Cove on Calvert Island and came to anchor there unhurt. It was later found that the lights were small ones caused by holes made by the government inspectors when the vessel was on the ways at Ballard and negligently left unplugged by the dock yard men. The water had leaked into the space between the inner and outer skin of the vessel and was released by the rolling motion.

All were glad to reach Dutch Harbor where we rested for two days and took coal and water, leaving on the 29th. We lay to just outside of the port and all hands fished for two hours in which we caught a ton of fine cod. These we hung up in the open air stern and the rest kept for two days. We were better at the last than at the first. Fair weather came and fair winds on leaving Dutch Harbor, and the Corwin spun merrily along for two days under wind and steam huffing the ice and clearing a path for the bow and the people on deck cheering the work of the only really ice-breaking steamer that goes to Nome this season.

On Saturday night, however, June 1st, we met our first big Arctic ice. The ice was piled in confused masses, ten to thirty feet high and unbroken as far as eye could see. Here we stopped and spent Sunday, a clear, calm, perfect day, while the captain looked for the "crack" in the ice. For a chance to get farther. We were within thirty miles or so of St. Lawrence Island and would have liked to land but it was impossible to proceed, and on Monday morning we reluctantly turned south again, retracing our course and hoping to find passage to the eastward. We again sighted the main fleet of Nome-bound boats lingering in the broken ice and sighted, about 10 a. m., a wreck with signals of distress flying. This proved to be the barkentine Catherine Sudden, 500 tons, bound for Nome with a very valuable cargo and 33 people. She had stove in one of her lumber ports on the ice and was dismasted and almost under water. Her crew had taken to the ice and had saved a few of their personal effects and some provisions. The brigantine Pittsburg and the schooner Robert L. Richards, formerly a Boston fisherman, were standing by. The Corwin broke through many miles of ice to the Sudden and spite of the fact that her captain abandoned her and warned us that she would sink in a moment rescue was attempted.

After two days of incredible labor we had the Sudden under water and only a little of the stern floated above water. What kept her from sinking is still a mystery. We patched up her broken deadlights, cut away the remaining lower half of the foremast, which with spars and rigging weighed her down, and then began to try and get the water out of her. A steam pump was put on the Corwin, the ship's pumps were manned, and the whole city of the Corwin's people turned to with buckets and bailed like mad men for twenty-four hours. For a long time it was a desperate struggle with little odds for either side, but pluck and persistency won, and we towed the vessel into Nome. The ship and cargo were worth $125,000 when they left Seattle.

The Corwin company has thus far been fortunate beyond its expectations and enters upon its summer's work with confidence and diligence and business acumen will bring it further success. All the members of the expedition are in good health and spirits and look forward to a pleasant and prosperous year.

Very truly yours,
F. W. HUESTIS,
President Corwin Trading Company.

He Got Posted.

It was on an open car. A man of years and sedateness sat next to a young man who was consulting a pocket dictionary. By and by, and without any premonitory symptoms, the sedate man said:

"It's in there. I was looking over one of them books yesterday, and I picked out the very words."

"What do you refer to?" asked the young man.

"To what a woman up my way called me when I asked her to marry me."

"And what was that?"

"A concave catlepie semi-annual old idiot. At first I didn't exactly know whether she meant to say yes or turn me down, but after looking in the dictionary I made up my mind that she was not for me. Mighty handy, these dictionaries are, when you get stuck on a hard word, eh?"—Washington Star.

Norumbega Park.

These are the last days of the engagement of J. W. Gorman's minstrels at the Rustic Theatre in Norumbega. By its striking costumes, good singing, jokes, dances and orchestral music, the company has scored big successes daily and its going will be regretted. The London Vaudeville company, which comes next week, will be a good substitute, however.

One of the events of the week at the Park was the annual picnic of the children of Newton at the expense of the Read fund. This affair has been going on for twenty years, but this last outing was probably the most successful of any. Special cars carried the children 1000 in number, to the Park. In the morning the flying horses were busy for two hours giving youngsters a whirl. The animal enclosures were surrounded by scores of little folk who were delighted with all that they saw. After a light luncheon at the restaurant, they trooped to the Rustic Theatre and saw the minstrel show. Then home again in special cars.

The aldermen in charge of the picnic unanimously expressed the opinion that no better place than Norumbega could be found for such an outing, and it is more than likely that the Park will be used again in the future.

A HUMAN LIFE.

- A ship that throbs along in dire distress Till lost in oceans of forgetfulness.
- A tangle of sweet flowers, whose petals turn To ash of unfulfillment in an urn.
- A wisp of tangled threads, whose parted ends No deft hand joins, no endless effort mends.
- A play whose fields the players merely greet And go and leave the story incomplete.
- A bud that opens brilliant at the dawn, Flings sweet perfume a moment and is gone.
- A breath between a cradle and a bier, The blending of a smile, a sob, a tear.
- A book whose pages turn with each new day Till time has read the tale and cast away.
- A mask worn till a passing play is done To cloak a wraith and hide a skeleton.
- A lie, whose ghostly semblance is concealed Till in a shroud its untruth lies revealed.
- A thing that shapes the sod for a brief day And dies and leaves its faithful slave mere clay.
- A story that is told ere 'tis begun, A song that only whispers and is done.
- A thing that chains the lightnings and that stirs The deep, the elements its messengers.
- Lord of the sea and sky, a ruler proud That quakes at storms and trembles at a cloud.
- That comes and goes on wings unseen, a germ That grows to fill a grave and feed a worm.

CUPID WITH A JIMMY.

How a Husband Discovered Her Worth to His Wife.

BY HELEN FOLLETT.

When John Trumbull fell in love with vivacious and sprightly Gertrude Moore, no one would ever have suspected that he was a scholar, a thinker and a settled man of 40. His general actions were those of a youth of 18 undergoing his first case of love. The upshot of it was that when these two became engaged Miss Moore pulled Mr. Trumbull around by his philosophical nose and made him dance to her fiddling as suited her capricious and changing moods. Matrimony found the same condition of affairs. Every domestic question was decided by Mrs. Trumbull, no matter whether it was the choice of an apartment or the selection of a new coffee grinder. Mr. Trumbull, being still in a state of blinding affection and admiration for the little girl of 20 whom he had wooed and won, let her have her way, with the result that he was being henpecked to the queen's taste.

But as the years went by, as the years have a way of doing, Mr. Trumbull gradually awakened to the one-sided state of affairs. Mrs. Trumbull, being selfish and possessing a thistle-down intellect, fancied that it would not do to let Mr. Trumbull know that she was at all fond of him. Some old lady had told her once that when a man knows a woman loves him his affection becomes chilled like whipped cream in an ice chest. So she stuck up her nose—it stuck up of its own accord, by the way—and went her usual pace of bullying and worrying him. She would do this, she would do that—what John thought didn't matter.

But, as said before, a change finally came over John's heart. He still considered that dainty wife of his quite the smartest, cleverest woman in the world; but, strange to say, he was becoming aware of her peculiar powers of dictating and laying down the law. John was quiet and inoffensive and just the kind of a man that offers splendid opportunities for the woman with a will of her own. For a long time Mrs. John did not observe that her husband's substantial admiration was growing thin almost to a shadow. But when she did realize it the blow was something fearful. It had been her opinion that even though she were to sell her best clothes to the rag man or burn the house up or turn his hair white with her everlasting criticisms John would ever remain the same—faithful, adoring, enduring.

One morning John didn't kiss his wife when he went down town to business. She snipped and wept and scolded the baby and the kitchen maid and then decided she didn't care. From that time on things went from bad to worse and from worse to even worse than that. Once in a great while when John's old vision of love for his wife came up he would take her in his arms and tell her that she was the prettiest thing in the world. Following her old time tactics, Mrs. John would in return comment on his bad choice of a necktie or let loose the pleasant information that his collar was soiled on the edge. John's heart would sink, and he'd tramp off to work feeling like an orphan asylum in a derby hat and creased trousers.

As it was not John's nature to war against any one he simply kept himself out of Mrs. John's way. Sunday afternoons he went over to the North Side to see an old college chum of his. These trips were his only dissipations.

One Sunday afternoon when he and his old friend were discussing some particularly exciting college scrimmage that had taken place 15 years back the telephone bell rang, and a woman's voice begged to speak to Mr. Trumbull. He went to the phone.

"Is that you, Gertrude?"

"Yes, John. And won't you come home, please? I let Sadie take baby over to your mother's, and everybody in the building is out, and I'm having the fidgets. I don't know what I'm scared about, but I'm just nervous."

"All right, dear," said John, and home he went, not stopping long enough to finish up the recollections of the college fight.

At home he found his wife sitting curled up on a little settee looking very much as she had looked when five years before he had begged and entreated and kissed her into saying "Yes." She was twisting her handkerchief into little wads and ropes, and he knew by that that she was distracted about something.

"I know you think I'm a silly to feel this way when it's not even twilight yet. But I know positively that somebody tried the kitchen windows while I was lying down, and I just couldn't get over it. I always was afraid of burglars and ghosts." And then she had a nervous chill.

John said nothing. He took out a copy of Spencer and lighted a cigar. After a time the baby was brought home and put to bed. Mrs. Trumbull had recovered from her nervousness and was peering out from behind a window shade listening to a conversation that was going on in the court.

The servant employed by the family in the apartment just below the Trumbulls' abode was in the flat opposite telling the occupants of that place that she was unable to get into the house.

"I can't turn the key, and if you don't mind, ma'am, I'll go through your window."

The people didn't mind at all. They even held the girl's parasol and pocket-book while she clambered from one window sill to the other.

Then came a crash. It was a terrific crash. Had the girl fallen into the court? No. The sounds that came from the door below were unlike those heard when Hendrik Hudson played ninetins in the Adirondacks. At that point came a shriek, such as the stage heroine gives vent to when the villain gets after her with a butcher knife. It was sickening. Mrs. Trumbull waited half a second, then stuck her head out of the window and with the help of half a dozen other feminine voices called: "Mary! Mary! What's the matter?"

The reply was a volley of sobs and squeals winding up with, "The flat's been robbed!"

Mr. Trumbull was surprised to see his wife with hair streaming down her back and hands clutching the folds of a bath robe go scotching through the library out into the hall and down the stairs.

In ten minutes she returned. Her eyes were big and black and scared. Her teeth were chattering, and her hands were busy with each other. She curled up on the divan and looked at her husband.

"John, what do you think? The Smiths' flat has been robbed, and there's hardly a scrap of anything left. They came through the kitchen window. They even took some Persian rugs and Mrs. Smith's sealskin. And the silver's all gone, and the house—oh, you just should see it! It's knee deep with the things that they've pulled out of the dressers and wardrobes."

John continued to read his Spencer. "That's too bad," he said.

Silence of five minutes.

"John," she spoke very softly.

"Yes?" he asked, not looking up from Spencer.

"John, do you know I'd just been scared stiff if you weren't here?"

John smiled sadly.

"You won't go off on that hunting trip, will you?"

"Well, I'll, I'll," he drawled uncertainly.

"I just won't let you, now. They might come in and take my old candlestick or the baby or my grandmother's set of china. And—I'm not a bit afraid when you're here—honest, I'm not."

John's chest swelled up. This was something new. He threw Spencer on the floor and went and looked at his revolver. Then he tried the dining room windows. After that he threw his arms out and doubled them up to see if his muscle swelled up as it did when he was a lad at school.

He walked back and forth through their bit of a flat and held his head up high. Then he sat down beside that little tyrant of a wife and looked her in the eyes.

She giggled hysterically and ran her fingers across his mustache, just as she used to do when poor John was so crazy with love for her that she could have pulled out every hair of his head and he'd never have known it.

"Dear," John said softly, "I never knew before that there was any place for me in this house, that I filled any want here. But now I find that I am useful, that I am a burglar scarer. God bless the man that stole those things down stairs. It'll be hard on the Smiths, but it's a mighty fine thing for me."

And they lived happy ever after or had for a week, as the burglary only took place that far back.—Chicago Times-Herald.

"Stupid" British Officers.

The Duke of Wellington once declared that there was nothing so stupid as a gallant officer, and a correspondent of the London Times complains that while the British officers are as brave as brave can be they are mostly "stupid." This charge is not brought against the British navy. In explanation of it Navy and Army Illustrated says: "When an army officer is careless or stupid in handling his men, he rarely kills anybody. It is otherwise with a naval officer. If he is careless or stupid, he will in all probability not only come to dismal grief himself, but will bring it on others. Therefore there is a perpetual stimulus to efficiency in the case of a naval officer, and his superiors have a powerful motive to be sharp with him. An easy going colonel or general may tolerate shams in field days and maneuvers, but the admiral or captain who wants to sleep with some confidence that he will not be waked by a collision or a stranding cannot make light of neglect on the part of the officer of the watch.—Army and Navy Journal.

Premature.

"Did you ever try mud baths for your rheumatism?"

"No. I once ran for a political office, but that was before rheumatism had asserted itself."—Chicago Times-Herald.

—An article by Dr. Shinn on "The Tearing Function of the Stage," appears in the July number of "The Coming Age,"
a new magazine published in Boston. It goes over the same ground as that covered in his recently published sermon, but includes considerable space to an attack upon
low theatres, immoral plays and immoral actors. He claims that the respectable part of society can do much for the reformation of the stage if they will simply refuse to patronize anything that is not clean and wholesome.

—In his address at the funeral of M.
George W. Hall of Elmwood street, last Tuesday, Dr. Shinn spoke among other in Newton. He was born here and lived

he was in business in Cambridge, but walked home on Saturday to Newton.
Forty of his eighty years were spent in the house where he died. His ancestors for generations back were Newtonians, the original family coming here as early as 1612. It was one of the thirteen families to settle in the "new town" when the "new town" began. Reference was made to the sturdy character of the old time resi-

which we rest who have come into the goodly neighborhood they created for us.

(Special Legislative Correspondence.)

Boston, July 17.

The Great and General Court dies hard. It has been a week since its demise was imminent, and a month since it ought to have been prorogued; but it is now only a question of hours.

But the General Court held on to measures of interest in the vicinity of Newton almost to the very end. The writer grieves to say that Newton owes nothing whatever to the senator who has represented her this year for his work the last few weeks. He did excellent work in assisting Mr. Chadwick to carry through the police hearing bill, but after that time he represented Ashland rather than Newton. His labors for the Hopkinton water bill were almost crowded with success, but by a very narrow majority the bill was defeated. Then Senator Ray had it reconsidered and referred over to the next General Court. Of course, he will have an excellent argument for re-election with those who believe in the Hopkinton bill. Newton, which would have to pay a proportion of the $1200 annuity to Hopkinton, will not go very enthusiastically over this proposition, however.

On Friday the senator took up the cudgels for the "mill tax" bill on the ground that it would be a relief to Ashland. It would be far from a relief to Newton, unless that city would like to be relieved of several thousand dollars annually, in order that Ashland may pay a dollar or two additional to some of her teachers. Senator Washburn of Worcester asked a few close questions of Senator Ray. He reminded him that this was a bill to relieve small towns presumably. Ashland was able to pay her teachers but $8 per week, and her school taxes were a burden. He inquired what was to be done with the additional money, and Senator Ray said it was to be used to pay the salaries. Then Senator Washburn wanted to know how this would be any relief to Ashland, which would still be burdened to raise the $8 per week. Senator Ray remarked that he did not believe that the school taxes would be lessened as a result of the mill tax bill. The additional money would be used to improve the schools simply. The senators took him at his word, and concluded that the bill was to be a burden in some places, and be no relief elsewhere; therefore they killed it by a heavy majority. Thus was one veto averted.

But notwithstanding the writer's belief that Senator Ray was wrong on the mill tax, the Hopkinton bill, the Boston and Albany bill, it is undoubtedly true that he has a remarkable influence, and that his motives are always of the best. There are few men more popular than he.

Among the able men lingering to this closing week are the Cambridge-Somerville parkway bill, which seeks to secure a boulevard from Cottage Farm station to the Falls Way boulevard in Somerville. This bill has an initial estimate of $600,000 for the payment of land damages, and does not cover the work of construction. For this reason it was believed the bill would be vetoed, as it was. Then the bill for taking Fuller's wharf in Brighton as a part of the Charles river reservation was enacted on Monday, and was another bill for the improvement of the banks of the river. This bill not only doing new work was able to go through, and the governor concluded there was merit in it and signed it.

The Boston & Albany bill was signed today and so Newton will have a connection with the line of the New York Central road. It was fought earnestly and vigorously up to the last ditch by those who objected to the lease. Three conference committees have been trying to reach some compromise bill. One was that on the great New England Cotton Yarn Incorporation, which has hung along to the very close, although it came in early. Another was that on the Cape Cod Canal bill, which was practically the first piece of legislation to be proposed, and seems likely to be the last one signed. If it does not fail of passage yet. A third was on the question of whether the chairman of the highway commission under the organization bill shall receive a salary of $4000 or $5000. Just how interested Commissioner Ross is in this I am not able to say. All the committee reported compromise bills.

The bill to provide that the State Treasurer should have the receipts and pay the bills of the various insane hospitals of the Commonwealth has been referred to the next General Court by the House. The House ways and means committee discovered that Trustee Spear and the various other hospital and asylum trustees were liable to give them such a long hearing that they decided to make this report. They did, however, report a resolve to provide that the State Board of Insanity, of which Hon. A. C. Jackson is chairman, should make a careful investigation of the whole subject and report to the next Legislature. The Senate, having passed the other bill, would have none of this resolve and rejected it promptly.

Mr. Chadwick's committee had hearings almost to the very last of the session. The last one they gave on the Cambridge-Somerville blasting bill, which has caused so much wrangling for the last year or two. The House members of the committee concluded that it was pretty late to try to report legislation and so asked that the bill go over to the next General Court, and the House followed the advice.

The Clinton and Sterling water bills are still in the air, the House having sent the Clinton bill along to the Senate, which rejected it on Friday and kept the Sterling resolve in its calendar until Monday afternoon. On this measure Mr. Langford was the only member of the water supply committee to dissent, although Senator May well and Representative Belmont of the metropolitan committee joined him in this attitude.

The writer desires to best testimony to the faithfulness, courtesy and ability of both of the Newton representatives. He believes it would be to the advantage of Newton were both these gentlemen to be sent to the General Court for as many years as they will consent to come. Long experience has convinced him that those cities which secure a good legislative delegation and keep them as long as they will stay, have far more influence in the councils of the Commonwealth than cities which are content to change their representatives every two years or even oftener. I am convinced that nothing has arisen of interest to Newton that has escaped the eye of either Mr. Langford or Mr. Chadwick, while they have maintained the reputation for courtesy that has applied to the Newton delegation for a long series of years.

DR. CLARK'S STORY.

THE GREAT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORER DISCUSSES THE CHINESE SITUATION.

Dr. F. E. Clark of Auburn, founder of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, has arrived in London fresh from the scene of conflict in China. The Boxer revolt was on the verge of outbreak when he left Peking, May 18. In an interview Dr. Clark said:

"Peking, Tien-Tsin and all northern China have been one great hotbed of insurrection throughout the spring, although the foreigners have felt that no dangerous rebellion was likely to break out inside of six months or a year. The Boxers all along had been indulging in incantations within the capital, but their threats were not taken seriously. Mr. Conger trusted the Chinese and consistently refused to recognize the gravity of the situation. To my mind he dwelt in a fool's paradise, although most solicitous in the protection of American interests. The Boxers were in the habit of exercising with obsolete weapons, a fact which served to inspire the foreigners with little fear, so that their boldness in obtaining modern armaments was altogether astonishing."

Early in May a Chinese Christian came to Peking from Tung-Chow, where he had been tortured by the Boxers, bringing word that they were only awaiting orders from some higher authority to rise all over the empire and exterminate the "foreign devils." It is generally believed that these orders were expected to come from the dowager empress, who is regarded as hand-glove with the anarchists. The American editors against the Boxers are considered to have been issued for the sole purpose of carrying favor with the powers. Li Hung Chang is discussed only with expressions of contempt by the Chinese. The old Chinaman is a selfish, unscrupulous demagogue, ready to ally himself with the empress, the Boxers or the foreigners, whichever should promise best to satisfy his ambition.

"There is not the remotest foundation for the charge that tactlessness of missionaries is responsible for the present crisis. It is simply the culmination of foreign hatred of long growth. Germany's occupation of Kiao-Chow is one of the most recent aggravations of the anti-foreign frenzy, while the building of the railway from Tien-Tsin to Peking is another provocation. The missionaries have been led to believe that a Chinese child lies buried under every tie of the road and that the wells along the route have been poisoned by the foreigners. There are American and European missionaries in the Eastern field are an uncommonly heroic, earnest and sensible set of men and women. Mr. Conger, as well as Colonel Buck, United States minister to Tokyo, are men that their work had been the most powerful influence in the Orient, not only in behalf of civilization, but in behalf of the advancement of China itself."

"The probable solution of the pending horror must be the destruction of China as a government. It is impossible for the dynasty to prevail there now. There is no international force capable of re-establishing order. Somehow or other, the powers must step in and revolutionize the empire's governmental machinery."

An Ideal Summer Place.

Mr. C. A. Farley has opened his cottage at Horse Neck beach, at the mouth of Buzzards Bay, and vacationers will find this an ideal spot for rest and recreation. The bathing is unsurpassed at any spot on the Southern coast, as there is a wide sandy beach with no undertow and the gulf stream makes the water so warm that even the most delicate can enjoy this spot. There is also fine sailing and fishing, and Ocean Cottage has fine rooms and an excellent table. There are a number of cottages in the vicinity, and people who once go to this spot return year after year. Mr. Farley's address is South Westport, Mass., and Horse Neck beach is reached by stage from New Bedford, a most delightful drive along the coast, with all our views all the way. During the hot weather we have had this week it is interesting to know that the thermometer at Ocean Cottage never got above 75, as there is a wide stretch of water on both sides of the peninsula. Mr. Farley will be glad to reply to any requests for terms or other particulars.

GOSHEN, ILL.
Dear Sirs:—Some days since a package of your GRAIN-O preparation was left at my office. I took it home and gave it a trial, and I have to say that I am very much pleased with it as a substitute for coffee. We have always used the best Java and Mocha in our family, but I am free to say I like the GRAIN-O as well as the best coffee I ever drank.

Respectfully yours, A. C. JACKSON, M.D.

A Golf Match.

It will interest many local golfers to know that the enterprising Brae Burn Golf Club of West Newton has made arrangements for a thirty-six hole match between Harry Vardon, the former open champion of Great Britain, and Bernard Nicholls, the Boston professional, who defeated Vardon in Florida last winter. The two men which the two men then met were not one which provides for a fair test of the game, but the Brae Burn course should bring out all the golf there is in either player, except, possibly, that Vardon will have little chance to show his wonderful long game. The match will be played early in October.

Cone-Pinkham.

At high noon Tuesday Miss Sarah Louise Pinkham, daughter of Mrs. Henry Vincent Pinkham of Newton, and Mr. Richard Wood Cone were married at King's chapel, Boston, by Rev. Charles G. Ames. The bride and groom are prominent in social circles and the historic edifice was filled with the friends of both. The bride wore a Paris gown of dark blue broadcloth, with satin trimmings and coral lace reverent jacket. Her white elition hat with pink roses was a veritable creation of the milliner's art. A reception was held at the Parker house, and afterward the wedding breakfast was served. On their return from their wedding tour Mr. and Mrs. Cone will live in Boston, and will be at home to their friends in September.

Died From the Heat.

There were a number of cases of sunstroke in this city, Wednesday, only one of which, however, has resulted fatally.

Miss Lizzie Kealey, 20, a domestic in the employ of Rev. H. J. Patrick of Washington street, Newtonville, was overcome by heat about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and in spite of medical aid died an hour afterward. She was a native of Ireland and had been in this country only a short time. She is said to have a number of relatives residing in different parts of the city.

Captain Noyes Was a Newton Boy.

Captain Charles R. Noyes of the 9th regiment, U. S. A., who has been reported as among the wounded in the recent battle in the vicinity of Tien-Tsin, China, was a former Newton boy.

He was born in Springfield, Mass., but came to Newton with his parents when a boy. His father was Horatio Stacey Noyes, who about 33 years ago, was the owner and proprietor of the Nonantum House at Newton Corner, which has since been remodelled over into the Nonantum block. It now occupies the whole of one side of what is known as Nonantum square. C. R. Noyes was educated in the schools of the town and graduated from the Newton High school about 1870. He entered the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., in 1875. He graduated from there in June 1879, and was assigned to the 9th infantry as second lieutenant. He was promoted to be first lieutenant Aug. 28, 1887, and captain April 26, 1898.

Capt. Noyes has seen considerable army service both in the West and Cuba, also at Manila. Several years ago he married a Miss Gertrude Noyes of Utah, a distant relative. His wife accompanied him to Manila, but is now on her way home to this country.

Capt. Noyes immediate family now reside in Chicago, where he has a mother and a brother, William Stacey Noyes. He, also, has a number of relatives residing in Newtonville, as well as a large number of friends, including former class-mates and other acquaintances.

How a Newton Horse was Drowned.

A horse valued at $150, owned by Patrick O'Brien, a stone mason in Newton, was drowned in the Charles River at Watertown Saturday afternoon. O'Brien and a companion, John Lynch, were in the express wagon drawn by the horse, and when near Beacon square, O'Brien turned to the river and drove in from what is known as the "road to town," which was high tide and the water almost covered the hill. O'Brien drove about in the water, until suddenly the horse either stumbled or fell into a hole, and before assistance could be summoned he had disappeared. O'Brien waded ashore, but his companion preferred not to get wet and waited until the Abbot's wagon came, when horse and wagon were drawn from the water.

Death of George W. Hall.

Mr. George W. Hall, one of the oldest residents of this city, died last Saturday afternoon at his home, 60 Elmwood street. Mr. Hall had been in failing health for some time, and his death was due to old age. He was born in this city in April, 1821, at the old Hall home-stead, in the vicinity of Galen street. His father, Geo. Hall, owned a big farm, embracing a large portion of the land that now comprises Elmwood street runs. Of the thirteen original families who were settled about "Newton Corner" when G. W. Hall was a boy, he was the last survivor. Mr. Hall was educated in the school presided over by Theodore Parker at Watertown, and when a young man went into the dry goods business in a store which is now occupied by the Globe book, wear and haberdashery. He retired from active life about 30 years ago. He was one of the foremost members in the old Universalist Society between this city and Watertown, and after it was given up some years ago, he attended the Channing Unitarian church. He had always taken a great interest in gardening, and for years was a member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. He was also interested in Tufts College, and never missed its annual commencement exercises. He leaves a son, Mr. Louis A. Hall, and two daughters, Mrs. Charles T. Stetson of Brighton and Miss Mabel T. Hall of this city.

The funeral took place Tuesday at his late residence. The services were held at 2:30 o'clock, and consisted of prayer and scripture reading. In the absence of a minister of the Rev. Francis B. Hornbrooke, the recent pastor of the Channing church, the Rev. Dr. George W. Shinn, rector of the Grace Episcopal church, officiated. There was a large number of relatives and friends present, and there were numerous floral tributes. The interment was at Mt. Auburn.

Was It a Miracle?

"The marvellous cure of Mrs. Rena J. Stout of Consumption has created intense excitement in Cambridge, Mass., writes Marion Stuart, a leading druggist of Munich, Ind. She only weighed 90 pounds when her doctor in Yorktown said she must soon die. Then she began to use Dr. King's New Discovery and gained 37 pounds in weight and was completely cured." It has cured thousands of hopeless cases, and is positively guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung diseases. See Hudson's. Trial bottles free at Arthur Hudson's.

Norumbega Park.

A circumstance that speaks well for Norumbega Park is the excellent condition in which the shrubberies and lawns remain throughout the warm months. When carefully tended places show signs of the sun's work, Norumbega remains as fresh and green as in the early spring and one must consider that the Park is situated on a hill which was once covered with ledges and gravel deposits. Whatever has been done in the way of lawns and shrubs has been done by human labor, and the result is very popular with those who have seen them at the Park in former seasons. Everything is conducive to a good presentation of the show at the Rustic Theatre, for the cotton picking scene is much more effective when seen out of doors than elsewhere. Some excellent variety acts are introduced, as well as the singing and dancing of the company, and the representations of plantation life.

The Plant Line will run a cheap excursion to St. John, good going by La Grande Duchesse, Saturday, July 22, and returning by any steamer within thirty days. Tickets and all information at 290 Washington street, or 20 Atlantic Avenue, Boston.

To People Who Own Carriages and to Other People Who Do Not.

To the Editor of the Graphic:—Some time ago, while attending a meeting of the hospital authorities, I saw a carriage driven up to the entrance. The occupants were a very lovely lady and a little crippled boy. I thought he was her son, so careful was she of him, but a gentleman by my side whispered:—"That is Mrs. A. and the boy is a patient here. She has been taking him out for a drive."

"God bless her," I said in my heart. "This is another evidence of the many I had heard of her willingness to share what she had with others. Nobody can begrudge her the ownership of a carriage when it is put to such good uses."

It has occurred to me that there are a great many carriages in Newton that might be used occasionally in the same way if the people who own them knew just how to do it. There are almost always some convalescents at the Hospital who would greatly enjoy a ride, and be much benefited by it. Some persons who read this may remember the eagerness with which they watched the clouds when the Doctor said, "You have been in your room long enough now, if tomorrow is a bright day you can ride out for an hour. You can never forget that first ride after the long period of illness and lassitude at home. Think what such a ride would be to others. Better than medicine? Yes, much better, now that they have got over the ailments which prostrated them and need only sunshine, fresh air, and a good appetite."

The best time to call with a carriage or to send a driver with one is anywhere from half past three to five on clear afternoons. An hours easy drive say from 4 to 5 or from 5 to 6 is enough for the average convalescent. Perhaps some could not ride longer than half an hour, and now and then one could be better if a nurse went along.

By the way some of the nurses themselves, when off duty, would greatly enjoy rides these pleasant afternoons. Occasionally some grateful patient in whose home a nurse has ministered shows appreciation by coming to the hospital to extend some courtesy, and it takes the form, now and then, of an invitation to ride.

Now that I have called the attention of our Newton people to this fine opportunity for doing good I am oppressed with the fear that so many people will want to send their carriages to give the convalescents rides that the material will not have enough patients to go around. Perhaps it would be well, then, to telephone the hospital about noon any clear day to know whether the carriage could be sent up at 4.

People who do not own carriages are reminded that the electric cars pass in front of the hospital, and that some of the convalescents could go that way. The matron would be glad to receive contributions for car rides. Very easy to send her a check or a postal money order, or if the amount is small, some postage stamps. Her address is Miss A. Mellowell, Newton Hospital, Newton Lower Falls.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed yellow, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by Arthur Hudson.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cures Them—Two Letters from Women.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to tell you of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I was sick in bed about five weeks. The right side of my abdomen pained me and was so swollen and sore that I could not walk. The doctor told my husband I would have to undergo an operation. This I refused to do until I had given your medicine a trial. Before I had taken one bottle the swelling began to disappear. I continued to use your medicine until the swelling was entirely gone. When the doctor came he was very much surprised to see me so much better."—MRS. MARY SMITH, Arlington, Iowa.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was sick for two years with falling of the womb, and inflammation of the ovaries and bladder. I was bloated very badly. My left limb would swell so I could not step on my foot. I had such bearing down pains I could not straighten up or walk across the room and such shooting pains would go through me that I thought I could not stand it. My mother got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told me to try it. I took six bottles and now, thanks to your wonderful medicine, I am a well woman."—MRS. ELISE BRYAN, Otisville, Mich.

Broke the Record.

The weather this week has broken the record in the way of heat, and three hotter
days than we have had have not occurred in the years since the weather bureau was organized, which is some satisfaction. The nights were almost as bad as the days, the mercury not falling much below 80, with a very faint wind, and piazzas were popular till midnight or later. In the daytime 90 in the shade was recorded and there was no comfortable place. Those who sought relief in the electric thought they were riding through a fiery furnace and wished they had remained at home. But relief came on Wednesday in the shape of a severe thunder storm about two in the afternoon, preceded by a high wind, with some terrible thunder and lightning. This cooled
the air somewhat and the rest of the day was fairly comfortable. The wind did some damage to trees, and the water came down in sheets, for a few minutes filling
all the gutters and flooding the streets.
Some washouts are reported, and the streets will need some repairs as a result of the storm.

UP HEAD ON A BLUNDER.

Erroneous Answer Wins Commendation From a Latin Teacher.

"The class in Latin will now recite,"

said the Latin teacher at one of the city high schools the other day.

The members of the class in Latin,

consisting of 30 or more bright looking

girls, with three or four boys, came forward and took their places. All moved along smoothly until the declination of the noun "donum" was in order, and there was trouble. It was the ablative that caused the trouble.

For the benefit of those not acquainted with the mysteries of Latin it may be mentioned right here that the ablative is the same as if one should say "don't know," slurring the two words, as is so frequently done, to "don't know."

"Miss Jones," said the teacher to the head of the class, "what is the ablative of 'donum?'"

Miss Jones gave her version and was told to sit down. The question in turn went down the entire length of the class, all failing, until it reached

the last, a boy who had a reputation

for baseball and football, but none for scholarship.

"Well, Percy, the ablative of 'do-

num?'" asked the teacher.

Percy scratched his head and despair-

ingly looked at his grinning classmates.

"Don't know," he finally blurted out.

"Right," said the teacher; "go up

head."

And then the class broke out into a laugh that cost each member ten marks, but none peached on Percy,

and the teacher to this day cannot understand what there is so comical in the ablative of "donum."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

LIGHTS FOR BIRDS' NESTS.

Some Curious Habits Practiced in the World of Songdom.

Many birds suspend their nests from the branches of trees, one of the most curious nests of that kind being that of the bay bird of India. It is hung from the branch, with its opening at the bottom, and hangs like an inverted bottle, secure from the approach of tree snakes and other reptiles. The most curious thing about the bay bird

is that it is said to light up its

nest by sticking fireflies on its sides with clay or soft mud. There seems to be little doubt of the fact.

Dr. Buchanan says: "At night each of the habitations is lighted up by a firefly stuck in the top with a piece of clay. The nest consists of two rooms.

Sometimes there are three or four fire-

flies, and their blaze in the little cells

dazzles the eyes of the bats, which often destroy the young of these birds."

Perhaps other animals are scared off

by the bay bird's electric light, since

a writer in Nature records this curious observation: "I have been informed on safe authority that the Indian bottle bird protects his nest at night by sticking several of these glow beetles

around the entrance by means of clay,

and only a few days back an intimate friend of my own was watching three rats on a roof rafter of his bungalow.

When a glow fly lodged very close to them, the rats immediately scampered off."—Our Dumb Animals.

Broken Commandments.

The brilliant young preacher, when he makes his parochial calls, endeavorers to cultivate an acquaintance with the development of the younger minds,

thus after a fashion keeping tab upon his Sunday school teachers.

The other afternoon, while he was waiting in the drawing room of a beautiful Cass avenue residence for the delayed appearance of Elsie's mamma,

he was entertained by the little daughter herself. Taking her upon his lap,

he began a review of the church lessons that had been given to the little maid of 5.

"Can you tell me, Elsie, how many commandments there are?"

"Yes, sir; seven or eight."

"Oh, no, dear; there are ten."

"Yes, I know there used to be, but I heard papa tell mamma yesterday that you had broken two or three of them

at least, and that would leave only seven or eight, you know."—Detroit

THE ENDOWMENT OF THE HOSPITAL.

It will be very gratifying to the friends of the Newton Hospital to know that the Endowment Fund has grown until it amounts now to about $65,000. This is a very respectable sum when it is considered that no special effort has been made until now to increase it.

Recently the Trustees have sent out a circular to persons of means in our city asking them to run the Fund up to $150,000 or even $200,000. In the judgment of the Trustees the Hospital has only about one-third of what it needs to ensure its permanency and to provide for its future expansion.

It is hoped there will always be generous people who will contribute to meet the current expenses of such an institution, but an endowment fund is like a reservoir. It is the storing up of supplies so that the institution may never be put in peril, or be subjected to the necessity of begging in the streets.

Judging from the lengthening list of contributors to this Fund persons of means
in our city have confidence in the institution. It has won their confidence by its good work, and the number and extent of their gifts and bequests virtually constitute an appeal to other persons of means to see that the Hospital has enough. It is no longer an experiment, but a well established, useful institution, with all of its affairs under the best of management. A man who has money to give outright now,
or by bequest in his will after a while, can be sure that what he does for the Hospital is well done and that his money will be carefully used, and the income applied to the relief of suffering.

It has been said that in some circles it is not considered genteel to make a will and leave nothing to Harvard College. Perhaps the time is near when people of means in Newton will remember the Hospital in their wills as a matter of course, or, better still,
when they will be sending their checks for the Endowment Fund right along, not waiting to die to do good, but resolved to do all
they can while they have life and strength.
It is well to remember that the Treasurer of the corporation is Mr. George S. Bullens, Waverley avenue, Newton, and that the corporate title is "The Newton Hospital,
a corporation established Jan. 11, 1881."

The Legislature has adjourned, after all,
and its record is made up. After its startling changes of votes on important matters, its dawdling through all the first part of the session, its crowding all the important business into the last two weeks,
when there was not time to properly discuss it and its general demoralization,
one would have thought the usual mock session would have been dispensed with, as too suggestive of its regular sessions. But the affair was held with an attempt at the usual hilarity, and congratulations were showered upon each other by the members, who told how wise and hardworking they had been and so on. They will not hear much of this from outsiders so perhaps it was the wise thing to have it said before adjournment by themselves. The session has been of unusual length, the lobby is said to have been unusually active and influential, and whatever it wished done was accomplished in same fashion. Possibly this legislature does not deserve its bad reputation, and the members really did the best they could under the circumstances.
At any rate the people can be grateful that nothing worse was done, and that we have had such an official as Governor Crane to look after things and interpose his veto, by which some of the bad measures were killed. The legislature with its shifting vote, was evidently not sure of its ground,
and had confidence that the governor knew best as they did not pass any measures over his veto. This is to its credit at any rate, and shows that under better leadership a better record would have been made.

An article in a local paper last week,
claiming great credit for brilliant financing in placing a large loan for the city at 3 per cent, amused every one who was familiar with the circumstances, and most of all the city authorities referred to, who did not claim any special credit for the transaction. A man can usually get money
at a very low rate if he borrows from himself and that was practically what was done in this case. The city wanted $35,000 for the new contagious wards at the Hospital, and as there was money enough

in the sinking fund, that department took the note at 3 per cent. To claim that the city was a great gainer by the transaction
would be merely to show that one department gained at the expense of another.
The paper referred to stated that Boston
had to pay 4 per cent, while this transaction showed that Newton could get money
for three, and that with one exception it was the only case on record where a city had got a loan at such a low rate. Perhaps other cities do not have any spare money in their sinking funds, for which there is no better investment.

The new line of electric from Newton
to the Marine Park at South Boston by way of the Back Bay stations is said to be coming, the Boston Elevated having decided to grant the request of Newton people. Thus Newton people can go direct to the salt water and enjoy the sea breezes for one fare. The Elevated secures a large revenue from Newton and therefore it can afford to be very obliging in the way of extra cars especially when they will add to the already large revenue of the road.
With all these new lines of electric and new railway locations Newton is fast getting all needed accommodations in the way of street cars. Such weather as we have had this week would be a favorable time for the railway companies to ask for new locations, as every citizen would favor
having the cars run right past his door, so that he might be saved all trouble in getting to and from his business and the stores.

The census requirements of manufacturers and business men are about as absurd and inquisitorial as they could be made, and to conform to them exactly would require a special bookkeeper all the time from one census to another. However there is a saving clause and the victim
only has to answer them to the best of his knowledge and belief. Just what useful purpose all this detail serves, except to furnish places for an army of office holders, does not appear, but under our peculiar system of politics, that is the chief consideration. How could all the bosses from Hanna down retain their power if they did not have a large amount of spoils
to distribute, and appointees to assess during a campaign?

Prostrated by the Heat.

There was great excitement at the Newton telephone exchange, Wednesday, owing to several of the young lady operators being overcome by the heat. The exchange is in the second story of the block with a flat roof overhead, and it fronts the east, without blinds or awnings to protect it from the sun. The heat was something terrific, and it was probably about the warmest place in Newton. The young ladies were attended by a physician, and have fully recovered from the effects, but it is hoped that the telephone company
will see the necessity of providing awnings
for the windows, as there is still a long stretch of summer to come. Patrons of some allowance in this torrid weather if their calls are not attended to as promptly

Damage by Wednesday's Storm.

Although Wednesday's storm was one of the most violent that has passed over the city this season, owing to its short duration
very little damage was done. Several trees were broken down by the strong wind, and at the West Newton farm of Mr. George H.
Ellis, a large windmill was blown over and wrecked. For the few minutes while it lasted the lightning was unusually sharp,
and at the outset shattered a tree at Washington park, Newtonville. The power system of the Newton & Boston street railroad

in a number of cars were burned out. No serious damage, however, was done, and

COOKERY IN BOLIVIA.

The National Dish, Chupe, and How It is Prepared.

The stoves of the Bolivian Indians are curious things. A hole is dug in the ground about 18 inches deep and a foot square, and over this is built a roof of clay with holes of different sizes to receive the various cooking pots. Roasting is done on spits passed through the holes, so that the meat comes out very much smoked unless great care is taken to have only live coals at the bottom of the oven.

The national dish and the common food of the masses is "chupe," a sort of first cousin to the Irish stew. It is a conglomeration, composed of irregular constituents from the animal and vegetable kingdoms, a mess of mutton and such other meats as are available: chicken, fish, fruits, potatoes, carrots, barley, corn, rice, onions, yams, etc., chopped up, highly seasoned with peppers and herbs and stewed to a consistency of porridge. What happens to be left from one meal simmers in the pot until the next. If the fire goes out, the "chupe" is allowed to cool, but it is warmed up again and a new supply of the ingredients added to the water logged and greasy stuff for the next meal.

In the cities, at the hotels and restaurants where there are French or Swiss cooks, the "chupe" is savory and palatable, but the farther you go from the centers of civilization the worse it gets. One eats it at first under protest, then from necessity and only to escape starvation, but finally the stomach rebels, and you limit your diet to boiled eggs and fruit, which are usually to be obtained, but the experienced traveler always takes canned meat and bread with him.—Surre (Bolivia) Letter to Chicago Record.

STREET PARADE FLOATS.

Many Difficult Problems to Be Met in Their Construction.

"The making of decorative street floats is a difficult trade," said a New Orleans scenic artist who has had plenty of experience in the line he mentioned. "There are so many things to be considered. For instance, a float must look well both near and far. It must be able to stand a dash of rain. It must be light enough to go over any kind of street and solid enough to resist a gust of wind, and, most important of all, it must be so constructed that it will appear all right to folks in upper windows."

"Some years ago a young designer from the north made several small models for tableau cars that charmed everybody who looked at them. They were certainly very beautiful and novel, but when I was called in as an expert I said at once that they wouldn't do. They were designed to be viewed from the banquettes only, and from a second story window every particle of effect would have been lost. Moreover, a lot of hidden mechanism was certain to be discovered at any elevation above 15 feet."

"The young artist frankly admitted I was right and abandoned the job. He said it involved entirely too many optical problems to suit him. When I make my drawings for a float, I calculate on a visual sweep of 30 degrees. That goes from the level of children on the pavement to people looking almost straight down from the upper floors of tall buildings. Unless such a precaution is taken the car is certain to be a failure."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Man and His Smoke.

Every little while you read that a man 90 years old and still hale and hearty has smoked all his life, but it is nevertheless a fact that smoking is very injurious. Men should be ashamed that they are unable to quit the habit. This is not written by a man who has no desire to smoke, but by a man who smokes a great deal, has tried several times to quit and couldn't do it.

When you find a boy who is pale and sick from his first smoke, remember that his father and his grandfather are to blame. It will take thousands of years to reform the world if we begin now. A boy is as certain to look for a pipe as he is to look for a sweetheart. His father was guilty of both offenses before him.—Aitchison Globe.

Her Little Confidence Game.
"We're playing railroad train," she said as she pulled her father's paper away, "and I'm the conductor. Ticket, please."

He took a card from his pocket and handed it to her. She looked at it intently for a minute and then handed it back. "That was issued yesterday," she said, "and isn't good today. You'll have to pay cash or get off the train."

He gave her a dime. He knew he had been "worked," but what else could he do?—Chicago Post.

Some Big Salaries.

Speaking of big salaries, the biggest on record was paid to George Gould. For ten years' work his father gave him $5,000,000. The account went down as "for services rendered." That was at the rate of $500,000 a year.

The highest salary ever paid a railroad president was the $75,000 a year that went to Sir William C. Van Horn when he was president of the Canadian Pacific.—New York Press.

At His Word.

Customer—You sell cracked eggs at half price, do you not?

Clerk—Yes, sir. We always make a 50 per cent reduction on cracked goods. Anything else today?

Customer—Yes; you may give me a dollar's worth of cracked wheat. Here's 50 cents.—Columbus (O.) State Journal.

The young wife's ideals begin to be shattered when she sees her husband put his feet on the best chair.—Philadelphia Record.

SALARIES OF OUR PLAYERS.

The Pay of Actors Varies From $10 to as Much as $500 Per Week.

Franklin Fyles, writing of "The Theater and Its People" in the Ladies' Home Journal, touches interestingly upon the earnings of actors and corrects the oft repeated reports of the enormous earnings of players. "Salaries vary with circumstances," he says. "The manager may find at $25 a week a player whose moderate talent exactly fits a part of considerable importance. He may have to pay $150 if the role is singular and fit candidates scarce. If he wants celebrity in addition to ability, he may be willing to make the salary $500 a week. In that case he takes into account the public value of the name and makes a feature of it in his advertisements."

"Not more than ten actors in America, aside from the stars, receive as much as $250 a week, and not more than five actresses are paid this amount. In fact, $150 a week is exceptional, and $100 will engage an excellent hero or heroine, a fine comedian or a delineator of eccentric character. The wages run down to $75 for a sourette, ingenue or old man, to $50 for an old woman, juvenile man or juvenile woman, and so along to utility and chorus men and women at $12 or $18 a week. These are the wages of thoroughly competent actors in companies of good grade."

Strange Freak of Fate.

Says the Portland Oregonian: "It is the belief of some historians that the name 'Oregon' is Aragon in disguise, that it was given to this country by the early Spanish voyagers and that American explorers so interpreted the word given them by the Indians. The theory is at least plausible and indicates a strange freak of fate. The name Spain proudly brought to this distant coast returned to the West Indies 300 years later to destroy the power of Spain on the seas! Little thought De Fuen when he sighted this coast in 1502 that some day it would build a warship which, under the name of Aragon, or Oregon, would be foremost in the battle that marked the end of Spain's dominion in the new world."

Peculiarity of Snakes.

A snake tamer who had trained a serpent to follow him around the house and even out of doors happened one day to take it with him to a strange place. The snake, unused to the locality, suddenly seemed to forget all his training and, escaping into the bushes, resisted capture with bites and every indication of wildness. When caught, it at once resumed its tame habits. This tendency to become wild immediately upon obtaining their freedom and to again become tame when caught is said to be a peculiarity of snakes.—New York Tribune.

The Probable Reason.

The Clergyman (proudly)—People are loath to leave my church. Why, after services, it is fully 15 minutes before the edifice is emptied!
The Sinner—I don't wonder at that. Some people are very hard to awaken!—Brooklyn Life.

Profitless.

Miss Chicago—Money talks, you know.

Miss Boston—A vulgar apothegm. Culture makes no concession to the loquacity of lucre.—Boston Courier.

It was the custom of the Greeks to offer bees on a silver tray to Apollo in his temple at Delphi. Lord Bacon loved the onion so that he declared the rose would be sweeter planted in a bed of them.

Every little while you read that a man 90 years old and still hale and hearty has smoked all his life, but it is nevertheless a fact that smoking is very injurious. Men should be ashamed that they are unable to quit the habit. LAKE CHAMPLAIN'S ISLAND COUNTY.

A POPULAR RESORT FOR THOSE WHO LOVE TO FISH, HUNT AND CAMP.

Grand Isle county in Vermont comprising five towns almost completely surrounded by the waters of Lake Champlain and unsurpassed by any other locality in New England for scenic beauty and healthfulness is fast coming into prominence as a delightful summering resort. This year the hotels, camps and cottages are crowded as never before and the season is but just begun. These islands which have been described as the "garden of Vermont" present to the eye a perfect scene of landscape beauty, of inviting groves, of rich and cultivated fields and of neat and pretty homes as can be found in America, and a drive through the country with its ever-varying scene of the distant green hills and mountains, form a picture beyond the skill of brush to paint or pen to tell. The shores of the islands are thickly dotted with camps and cottages, and here are several first class resorts hotels at desirable points. There's fine bass fishing, hunting in season, boating, yachting, bathing, golf, and one who has spent a summer there needs no invitation to come again.

All the islands are easily reached from the Vermont mainland by steamer or by stage from different points on the line of the Central Vermont Railway, which publishes descriptive of the charms of the island county and send it for 4 cent stamp enclosed to T. H. Hanley, N. E. P. A., 306 Washington street, Boston.

The time allowed at Gloucester is two hours and with a fifteen minute ride each way one has nearly an hour and a half to enjoy the dinner. The service is all one could wish and the dinner adds greatly to the days enjoyment.

TIME'S BALM.

When first I met the fair Marie,
My smitten heart at once surrendered,
And in a week, with eager haste,
My love and all I have I tendered.
Marie was very calm and cool,
Though I was greatly agitated,
And when I came away—refused—
To endless anguish I felt fated.
But, oh, since then so many girls
I've seen, far prettier, sweeter, brighter,
That all their loveliness has made
My load of woe distinctly lighter!
In fact, since she said "No" I've met
A lovely girl whom I like better,
And now, whenever I meet Marie,
I think, "Thank heaven I didn't get her!"

LITTLE JIM.

His Peculiar Pleading For His Father's Life.

There were five men of us and a boy in the far western stagecoach as it rolled over the rough roads of Dakota. We had been together for four days. We called the boy Jim because his father did. We knew his father to be Colonel Weston, banker, cattleman and mine owner. The colonel wasn't a man to whom a stranger would take at first glance, and even after four days of his company none of us could say we liked him. When you came to study him closely, you saw that he was revengeful and relentless. The boy was frank, chipper and good natured, and you took a liking to him as soon as you looked into his big blue eyes. His age was about 10, and he had wit and knowledge beyond his years. We had yet 20 miles to go to reach the terminus, and the hour was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon when the coach came to a sudden halt as it tolled up hill. Next moment the driver called to us:

"All you folks what don't want your heads blown off had better get down and line up. We've been stopped by a road agent."

We had arms in plenty, but no one moved to resist. Every bullet fired by the robber would bore its way through the coach and find a target, while the robber had the cover of the horses and was safe from our fire. It seems cowardly when you read it, but to get down and submit to be robbed was the wisest thing to do under the circumstances.

Little Jim was not a bit frightened. On the contrary, he rather enjoyed the situation. It was not so with the colonel. I saw him turn pale and heard him cursing under his breath, and he was the last man to get down.

The robber had a double barreled shotgun in his hands. He cautioned the driver to hold the coach where it was and then advanced upon us. He glanced carelessly into each face until his eyes rested on the colonel. Then he gave a sudden start, drew in his breath with a gasp, and we realized that there was a recognition. The colonel grew white under his look and began to tremble. The boy had no sooner looked into the road agent's face than he cried out:

"Why, it's Mr. Pelton—Mr. Pelton! Say, Mr. Pelton, I'm awfully glad to see you. Where've you been this long time?"

"So it's you, Jimmy," laughed the robber as he held out his hand for a shake. "Well, you have been growing since I saw you last. It's a wonder you knew me at first sight."

"Oh, I used to like you so well I couldn't forget your face," replied the boy. "Are there robbers around, Mr. Pelton?"

With gentle hand the man pushed the boy back in line and then stepped back a pace or two. As he did so his face grew very sober, and I saw a flash in his black eyes I did not like. His voice was low and steady as he finally said:

"I'm much obliged for your promptness in climbing down and lining up, and I think I'll let you off this time. The four of you may go back into the coach and go on. I'm leaving your guns with you, but don't attempt to play me any trick."

The colonel took his son by the hand and attempted to enter the stage with us, but the robber motioned him back.

"W-what do you want of me?" asked the colonel in a voice which quavered.

"I'll tell you later," was the reply. As the coach started on we looked out to see the three standing in the road. Little Jim still had hold of his father's hand, but had reached out the other and caught the robber's sleeve.

When we had gone 200 feet, the road turned and shut them from our view.

At the disappearance of the stage the man turned on Colonel Weston and pointed to the hillside on the right and said:

The white faced colonel entered the pines and held a straight course up the hill. Behind him came the robber and his son. The boy had been full of curiosity at first, but presently he was awed and frightened by the looks cast upon his father.

Two or three years before he and Mr. Pelton had been great friends. Mr. Pelton had been manager for his father. One day there had been a bitter quarrel, pistols had been drawn, the sheriff had rushed in, and Mr. Pelton had fled to escape arrest. He remembered his father calling the fugitive a thief and of men being sent out to hunt him down. All this came back to him as they followed the father up the rough way, and though he knew nothing of man's vengeance there was a feeling of dread in his soul. Now and then the robber ordered the colonel to the right or left, but these were the only words spoken until they finally reached a rude camp high up among the bowlders. By and by the robber half turned to look the colonel in the face and said:

"I've waited for this for two years. I could neither die nor go away until I had killed you."

"It will be murder—cold blooded murder," replied the colonel as he folded his arms.

"If it was murder a hundred times over, I'd do it. Do you suppose I can forget Rose Harper? Who separated us? Who mangled me? Who wrecked my life and sent her to a suicide's grave? Who drove me to be a fugitive from justice on a false charge? I'd kill you if 1,000 men surrounded me."

The colonel was silent for a time. He did not look at his boy, but past him. The boy's eyes were fastened on his face, however, and a chill crept over him as he noted the look of a man standing in the shadow of death. It was the first time he had ever seen it. He turned from his father after awhile to look at the robber.

"There was another look strange to him. It was a set determination to kill—the look of a man who had hated and thirsted and waited."

"Take the boy away first," said the colonel with a touch of entreaty in his voice.

"Yes; that will be proper," answered Pelton. "Come, Jimmy, let's take a walk."

"What—what you going to do with father?" whispered the boy as he walked slowly over and put his hand in that of the would be murderer.

"Never mind. Do you see that big rock up there? Well, go up there and see what is hidden behind it. Shake hands with your father before you go."

The boy crossed over to his father in a puzzled way, and the father lifted him up and kissed him. When he put him down, he said to him:

"Run along, Jimmy. If you don't find me when you come back, Mr. Pelton will take care of you."

"Oh, yes, Mr. Pelton will take care of me and see that I get home," replied the lad. "I'm awfully glad to see him. Wasn't it queer to meet him 'way off here? I was saying only a week ago that I wish'd he was back with us so that he could mend my wagon and help me make kites. Mr. Pelton was always good to me. I won't be gone long, and you and Mr. Pelton must be good friends. Don't you remember that mother said she was sorry for him? We want him back, don't we?"

Little Jim started off for the rock, but he hadn't taken ten steps before he was back again to say to the robber:

"And I want you to make me a new water wheel, and the handle has come out of the hammer, and nobody will sharpen my knife for me. If you don't come back, I don't know what I shall do."

"Perhaps I'll come back," whispered Pelton as he turned his head away.

"Oh, but you surely must. I've heard lots of people say you were a good man and shouldn't have gone away. Mother told me if I ever met you I might speak to you just as I used to. I'm going now, but remember that you are coming back."

The boy went away almost gleefully, and the two men heard his footsteps and his voice as he made his way toward the rock. The father looked after him until he was hidden by the trees and then turned to the robber and quietly said:

"Before he comes back. And you'll help him to get home?"

"Yes; before he comes back," replied Pelton as he drew his revolver. "It won't be murder, Colonel Weston. It'll simply be retribution. Do you want a minute or two to ask God to forgive you?"

The colonel sat erect with folded arms. He closed his eyes, and his lips moved. By and by he heard the click of the pistol. He did not open his eyes, but he felt that it was leveled at his heart and that his life was measured by seconds. Of a sudden came a call from little Jim. Half way to the rock he had turned about to shout:

"Oh, Mr. Pelton, don't forget to think up some new Indian and bear stories to tell me. Nobody has told me a story since you went away."

The colonel's eyes opened. The revolver was lying on the ground, and Pelton had his hands over his face. When he dropped them, there were tears in his eyes. He rose up, put the pistol in his pocket and said to the man waiting for death:

"I can't do it. Little Jim would know it some day. When he comes back, take him and go down to the road. It's only three miles to Cedarville."

With that he walked off into the brush and was out of sight in a moment. When little Jim returned, he found his father sitting as he had left him and gazing into the woods.

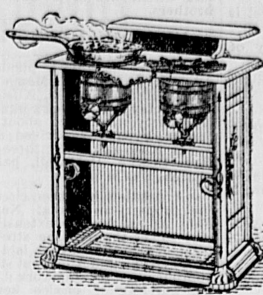

"What is it, father?" he asked. "What's the matter with you and where is Mr. Pelton?"

The man rose up slowly, took his boy's hand in his, and without a word in answer he led the way down to the stage trail and safety.—Butte Miner.

The Dry Battery.

The dry battery, so called, has almost completely supplanted the older wet battery for electric bell work, etc., on account of its greater convenience and lack of the disagreeable, sloppy qualities possessed by its predecessor. Somebody has defined a dry battery as one that is always wet inside and a wet battery as one that often dries up. It is precisely so; the dry battery is permanently wet inside. It is generally made up of a zinc cylinder or cup, in which is supported a carbon stick or rod, surrounded by some porous substance, such as "excelsior" or other fiber, mineral wool or plaster of paris. This is saturated with the active chemical, sal ammoniac generally, in a solution made stiff with gelatin. The whole is then sealed with pitch or some similar compound and is ready for use. These batteries are made in vast quantities and so cheaply that when one becomes exhausted it is simply thrown away and replaced with a new one.

HIS START IN LIFE.

A STORY THAT A DISCUSSION ON RELIGION BROUGHT OUT.

It involved a Christian and an infidel and a most remarkable coincidence, and the Narrative Pointed a Moral as Well.

The question of religion came up the other day in the Busy Men's Lunch club, and old Parmesan, who is senior warden of St. Cecilia's church and therefore constitutes himself a defender of the faith, remarked, "You may say what you like, gentlemen, but a religious man is more apt to help those who need it than an infidel."

"I am a firm believer in Christianity," remarked Bilson, who has made a million or so in the Swamp during the last few years, "but I take exception to that statement. When it comes to helping a fellow who is down, it's about an even toss between a Christian and an infidel. You doubt it?"

He continued as he saw old Parmesan shake his head. "Well, to prove what I say I will give you an episode in my own life. I came to New York in 1873 with no capital but a country made suit of clothes and a common school education. I was a lank looking young fellow, with 'hayseed' written all over me; but, like many another raw country lad, I was irresistibly attracted to the city, where I soon expected to strike the combination that would lead to fortune and fame. But before long my main thought was to keep from starving. I could get no work, and nobody would listen to me when I asked for it. I tried to keep up my courage, but in my heart I would have given anything to be back on the old farm again."

"Well, one day I grew especially desperate. The papers were full of the triumphant success of 'Billy, the Converted Bum,' who was holding revivals all over the country. And I asked myself why I, a clean, decent young fellow, who had never been a 'bum,' should be allowed to starve, while 'Billy' was living on the fat of the land. At first the wild thought came into my head to start out myself on a career of crime—I mean of revivalism under the name of 'Charley, the Converted Boy Friend,' and take in the shoddy like 'Billy.' But somehow I felt I couldn't get down as low as that. A brilliant thought struck me, however. I would state the whole thing in an advertisement, more to relieve my feelings than with any hope of getting an answer."

"So I scraped enough money together to insert the following in one of the papers: 'If I were a drunken 'bum' just taken out of the gutter, scores of kind religious people would stretch out a hand to help me. But as I am only a decent and self-respecting young man, with no vices or bad habits, I am without work and starving in this great, cruel city.' And I added my initials and address."

"The next day I called to see if there might possibly be an answer and got two. The first one I opened read as follows: 'I was touched by your strange advertisement, as I myself was once in the same position. I found help through a noble Christian man, and if you will call and see me I will prove to you that there is a Christian who is able and willing to help you if you are worthy. Ask to see me personally, as I am sorry to say my partner is an infidel, and, though a good man, he might not be disposed to look at your case so kindly.'"

"My heart jumped with joy on reading this kind letter, and for a little while I forgot the other one. But I soon opened it and read as follows: 'I was deeply stirred by the undertone of despair in your advertisement, as I was once as friendless as you are. I found a start in life through a noble man who, like myself, was an unbeliever. And if you will call and see me I will prove to you that there is an unbeliever who is both able and willing to give you a start in life if you are worthy. Ask to see me personally, as my partner is a Christian, and, though a good man, he might not be disposed to look on your case kindly.'"

"Wonderful coincidence, wasn't it? But the most wonderful part of the story is yet to be told. These two men were partners. Each one of them was trying to do a good deed without the knowledge of the other."

"The end of the story? Well, that was interesting and remarkable too. After trying in vain to decide to which of these two gentlemen I should make myself known I determined to see them together and read the two letters to them. I did so, and you ought to have seen the look of blank surprise that came over the faces of both men as they learned that, though differing so widely in creed, they were at one in acknowledging the religion of humanity. They were silent for a few moments, and then the Christian, with tears in his eyes, grasped the hand of his partner and said:

"Brother, I have wronged you, for I have learned that, without knowing it, you are not far from the kingdom of heaven."

"It is I who have wronged you," exclaimed his partner, "in assuming that you would not obey the teaching of your Master to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. Let us hereafter live as brothers indeed, even though we may not be able to profess the same creed. And may the unknown God whom ignorantly we worship accept us at the last!"

"These two good men gave me a start and were my dearest friends until they died. The moral of it all? Well, I think there is more goodness in the world than can be embodied in any creed, however true."—New York Tribune.

The manufacture of quinine was begun in Philadelphia by John Farr in 1820, the year of its discovery.

Expert Golfer Robbed.

The unfortunate golfer arrived early in the afternoon at Woodland and started in upon the links which include a portion of Gleason's pasture off Grove street, Newton Lower Falls.

Before going out upon the links, however, the golfer chose a tree branch to serve as a coat rack and upon this he placed his jacket.

Lying with the jacket were other articles including cuffs, cuff buttons, eye glasses, a ticket book and a pocket book containing money.

The thief who came upon them when the golfer's back was turned took everything, coat, diamond cuff buttons, pocket book and all. The golfer's loss is estimated very nearly $100.

FOUND DEAD IN WOODS.

A YOUNG LADY DIES FROM EFFECTS OF CHLOROFORM.

About 3 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, the body of Miss Edith B. Drury, one of the District Association nurses was found in the woods near the village of Eliot. A chloroform bottle was held by one hand directly beneath her nostrils, and it is supposed that death was due to this cause.

Appearances did not indicate suicide. Very few are inclined to give such a theory credence. It is not suspected that she met foul play, but rather that her death was the result of an overdose of chloroform, administered by herself, but without suicidal intent.

Miss Drury had been in Newton Highlands only a few months. She was in charge of the district nursing association's work there and was looked upon as efficient and capable.

She was graduated as a professional nurse from the training school connected with the Lowell hospital. In that city she had many friends and her coming to Newton was much regretted by them. Newton offered her a wider field, and there appeared to her a gratification of her ambition to extend her field of usefulness. The life of a nurse appealed to her and often she had declared her love for it.

Upon coming to Newton Highlands Miss Drury went to the home of Harrison street, Eliot, of Miss Chisholm, who is also a nurse. Other nurses boarded with Miss Chisholm, among them Miss Amelia Hayes, who was a friend and confidant of Miss Drury.

Miss Drury was always faithful in her work, and when opportunities for recreation came she took great pleasure in wandering among the woods a short distance from the home of Miss Chisholm. Often she sought the companionship of other nurses, but frequently went alone, remarking that she enjoyed the solitude. The spot in the woods where her body was found had been regarded by her as particularly inviting.

It was about 2.15 Monday afternoon that Miss Drury left her lodgings. Her manner indicated high spirits and she started early with her friends as she left the house. Several whom she knew passed her in Newton Highlands square a short time after. So far as known this is the last time she was seen alive.

There was some comment among the other nurses when Miss Drury failed to return Monday evening, but it was agreed that she had been hastily summoned to some case requiring her immediate personal attention. Thus satisfied in their own minds her friends retired without further inquiry.

It was early Tuesday morning that thoughts of her whereabouts and safety came again to the minds. Several persons of whom they inquired in the vicinity of the square of Newton Highlands and the Eliot station declared they had not seen Miss Drury since Monday afternoon.

POLICE FINALLY NOTIFIED.

It was early Tuesday afternoon that Miss Drury's friends invoked the aid of the police. Inspector Fletcher, who was detailed, was told that Miss Drury might have gone into the woods in the vicinity of the Sudbury aqueduct. Acting upon this suggestion, Fletcher, who is a resident of Eliot, started into the woods, where Miss Drury was known to wander. Reluctantly Miss Chisholm and Miss Hayes joined him. There were only the three searchers.

At the outskirts of the woods the trio separated, the inspector taking one course and the nurses another, directly opposite. It was the latter two that came upon Miss Drury's body. They had gone but a short distance, when the inspector heard them scream. He hastened toward the place he supposed them to be and met them running toward him.

"We have found her," said Miss Chisholm, "but she is dead."

With assistance Inspector Fletcher carried Miss Drury's body to her home on Harrison street. Later Medical Examiner Meade viewed it.

It was evident that the body had lain in the woods nearly 24 hours. The theory was at first that Miss Drury might have been overcome by the heat. The chloroform vial led to the adoption, however, of the more reasonable theory.

SOMETIMES USED ETHER.

Miss Drury, so the police were informed, had contracted a habit, which was considered harmless enough in itself, of inhaling ether to produce sleep. That she had been known to use these means when seeking relief from an overworked condition was also told the police.

The friends of Miss Drury affirm, and the police are not least inclined to take issue with them on the subject, that she carried the chloroform to the woods with her that sleep might be more readily forthcoming. Nothing is known by the police or others in this city that gives any ground for disputing what Miss Drury's friends give as their theory.

Miss Drury came originally from Westminister, where her parents now reside. She was 23 years old and much devoted to her father and mother. There are no relatives of the young woman in this city.

The body was taken to Fitchburg, Wednesday, and the funeral services were held later at her home in Westminister.

Death of Christopher Needham.

Christopher Needham died last Monday at his home on Crescent street, West Newton, aged 70 years, 6 months. His death was the result of a complication of diseases from which he had been a sufferer for more than two years. For the past two months he had been seriously ill.

Mr. Needham was born in Leicester, England, about 70 years ago. He was apprenticed to the freestone trade which he thoroughly mastered. In 1851 he came to Boston where he secured employment. Within a few years he returned to England and was married and came again to Boston.

During his early residence in Boston he was naturalized and entered with the favor of a native in the national, state and municipal politics. He was a member of the "Greenback" party and later stamped the state in the interests of ex-Governor Butler.

During the financial panic of 1873, Mr. Needham closed his freestone establishment on Washington street, Boston, and removed with his family to West Newton.

As an artist and designer, Mr. Needham's ability was often favorably commented upon. He received much instruction as a pupil at the old Lowell Institute drawing school under Principal Hollingsworth.

In West Newton, Mr. Needham had much of the village improvement at heart and his voice was often heard in local public meetings. He was affiliated with the Republican party for many years, but four years ago became an adherent of the Chicago platform of the silverites though declining to vote for Bryan as he believed him unfit as a candidate.

Mr. Needham is survived by a wife and three sons.

The State Highway Commission.

Dr. Thomas C. Mendenhall, president of the Worcester polytechnic institute, proposes to resign his position as chairman of the state highway commission. He is moved to this action by the law passed at the recent session of the Legislature, which requires members of the board to devote their time to the duties of the commission. The other members of the board are Chas. W. Ross, street commissioner of Newton, and William E. McClintock of Chelsea, a consulting engineer. These men are paid $2000 a year, and no one of them gives the state his full time. The law now provides that the chairman of the board must be a civil engineer, who is to be paid $3000 a year, and the other two commissioners are to receive $2500 apiece. The bills originally presented called for the members "entire" time. After considerable debate in the Senate, the word "entire" was stricken out, so that the law now reads that members of the board must give their time to about the same thing. Dr. Mendenhall is rather glad to get off the highway commission, as he tried to resign about a year ago. It remains to be seen whether Governor Crane can get the right sort of men at $3000 and $2500 a year, though it would seem as if good roadmakers could be had at these figures—Springfield Republican.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists, price 75c. per bottle. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Police Court.

At an early hour Sunday morning the attention of Patrolmen Condren and Marchant was called to the house of James Bird on Border street, West Newton, by a disturbance. On entering everything was found in a state of disorder, and Bird, the apparent cause of all the trouble, was lying on a lounge pretending to be asleep. He was placed under arrest. In court Monday morning he was put under $300 bail to keep the peace, was ordered to report at police headquarters every Saturday and Sunday night until Oct. 29, and was fined $5 for disturbance.

John Crosse, an Armenian residing on California street, was fined $15 court Monday morning for assaulting a fellow-countryman last Friday afternoon.

Naime Platten, a junk man residing at 63 Auburn street, West Newton, appeared in the local court, Monday morning, for the purpose of explaining how he came to be found in a state of disorder, and Bird, the apparent cause of all the trouble, was lying on a lounge pretending to be asleep. He was placed under arrest. In court Monday morning he was put under $300 bail to keep the peace, was ordered to report at police headquarters every Saturday and Sunday night until Oct. 29, and was fined $5 for disturbance.

Leonard M. Wilson and Jeremiah J. McCarthy, both young fellows, engaged in a quarrel about 5.30 last Saturday afternoon directly in front of Armory hall. Police officers saw them from a passing electric and both were placed under arrest. Each was found guilty of disturbing the peace in court Monday and fined $5.

Fred L. McGovern, residing in Roxbury, disturbed the usual tranquility at Norumbega park in such a manner as to draw the attention of nearly 1000 persons. McGovern was on a settee and attracting much notice when Manager Alberte requested him to leave the park. Immediately McGovern commenced a tirade of abusive language. Park policemen were called into play, but McGovern made it red hot for them all. He kicked, bit and yelled. Finally, when the manager Benoit was called in, then McGovern cooled off a little. He had succeeded, however, in tearing a portion of Park policeman Hart's trousers and getting in several blows on those who undertook to place him under arrest. In the police court Wednesday morning McGovern was fined $12 for disturbing the peace.

For several days the court's attention was occupied by the cases of four juveniles, namely, Peter J. Riley, William H. Driscoll, William O'Brien and Patrick Ford. The quietest, it was alleged, was concerned in the larceny of a quantity of milk at Norumbega one day last week. All were found guilty. Driscoll was committed to the Lyman school for boys and William O'Brien was sentenced to the same institution. O'Brien appealed and was released on $100 bonds. Riley was put on probation and Ford fined $5.

Plant Line to the Provinces Carrying Many Passengers.

Every ship of the Plant Line that left Boston last week was a record breaker. This is good evidence of the popularity of the trips offered by that line. A great many take the fourteen-hundred-mile cruise, while not a few are patronizing the new line to Sperry, the return to the Bras d'Or Lakes to Hawkesbury and home by the "Halifax" or "La Grande Duchesse," stopping a day at Halifax.

This gives one the longest ocean voyage out of Boston to the Eastward, being a trip to Europe. Many people are finding out that these trips can be made quite inexpensive. In fact, they cost no more than an ordinary two weeks vacation. Get maps and folders at Plant Line offices, 290 Washington Street, and 20 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, telling all about it.

Norumbega Park.

A Virginia deer fawn made its appearance at Norumbega Park a few days ago and has been officially enrolled as a member of the menagerie. He is a lively youngster and is much less timid than his mother. Another acquisition is an American bittern which stalks proudly about the aviary.

The delightful evenings have given the boats and canoes about all they could do to take people on the river. The Norumbega boat house is one of the largest on the Charles, containing over two hundred craft, but it is not large enough to accommodate all who wish to patronize it, so that by next year it will probably be nearly doubled in size and storing capacity.

Next week J. W. Gorman's Comedians will be the attraction at the Rustic Theatre. Their performance includes some exceptionally good vaudeville acts and promises to be one of the best in a season of clever performances. The Troubadours, who have their engagement with the troupe for performances on Saturday, have added no little to the reputation they have made at the Park in former years, and will be assured of a hearty welcome whenever they may return.

In Memoriam.

After a long and painful illness at Asheville, N. C., July 17th, Harry K. Dresser met the change called death.

Genial, manly, and possessed of a keen sense of justice, he practiced the command of "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

Why a life so full of promise for usefulness should end at the early age of 35, is not a subject for speculation or eulogy, for he said "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return," also said, "For my ways are not as your ways nor my thoughts as your thoughts."

The Decoration of the Bigelow School.

The Committee appointed by the citizens to superintend the interior decoration of the new Bigelow school on Park street, Newton, consists of Mr. Tyler, Dr. Shin, Mr. Sawin. They are aided by Mr. H. T. Bailey, State Supervisor of Drawing, and Mr. N. L. Berry, City Drawing Master.

At a recent meeting of the committee when the general subject had been most carefully considered, the members decided to visit the new school building on Park street, and to decide in each room just what would be desirable in the way of tinted walls and suitable pictures and casts. A scheme of color decoration with proper prints and framing has been made out, and if followed will give an interior that will be a delight and an inspiration.

The Committee decided to rule out battle pictures and everything that suggested suffering. They also thought it best not to crowd the walls with too many staring portraits. Their dominant idea in decoration is that whenever the eye glances over the walls there shall something be seen that is restful or uplifting.

Most of the pictures will be large carbon prints but it is hoped the funds will permit some colored photographs which can be had now at reasonable prices.

As there are 12 rooms, a large hall and extensive passage ways to decorate, it is feared the sum of $1000, which is collected from the citizens, will not be near enough. It is a rare opportunity to do a work that will be lasting in its good results, and make the Bigelow a model.

With a committee willing to devote all the time needed, and to use their best judgment, it is a pity if they are cramped for means in carrying out their plans a few hundred dollars more would enable them to realize their ideal more nearly.

Families who have children to educate should consider the quiet but effective influence to be exerted over the children who get their education in such beautiful rooms. The school house becomes a gallery of neighborhood picture gallery to be the pride and delight of older persons and their friends whom they take to see it.

Mr. H. E. Bothfield will receive contributions towards the Decoration Fund.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N. Y. Gentlemen—Our family relies so much from the use of GRAIN-O that I feel I must say a word to induce others to use it. If people are interested in their health and the welfare of their children they will use keep the beverage. I have used them all but GRAIN-O I have found superior to any, for the reason that it is solid grain.

Mrs. Ellen Weatherbee passed away at her home on Winona street last Saturday after a long illness, the cause of death being cancer. Deceased was 62 years of age and was formerly a well known resident of Dedham. Funeral services were held at the Winona street church on Monday last Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock and the interment was in the family lot at Forest Hills.

Clinton H. Alexander, 55 years, died early last Saturday morning at his home on Crescent street. It is thought death was caused by heart failure. Mr. Alexander was a native of Troy, N. H. Many years of his life were passed in Gardner, where he conducted, for a long period, a successful undertaking business. About 3 years ago he came to this city and established himself in the same business with an establishment on Auburn street. This was closed some time ago, however. Prayers were held at the house last Monday morning at 10.30, Rev. Calvin Cutler, pastor emeritus of the Congregational church officiating. The remains were taken to Gardner for interment.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed yellow, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was a long illness, the cause of death being cancer. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves it matches merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by Arthur Hudson.

A Robin's Family Affairs.

This is a true story as just told to me by a closely observant eye witness, too busy to write it out herself. Three robins, apparently a father-bird, a mother-bird and one of their young nearly full grown, were hopping and flitting, only last Saturday afternoon, among and near our currant bushes. The old birds were apparently teaching and persuading the young one to help itself to currants. The young one, accustomed to being taken care of, wanted to be fed by its parents. These, by a series of enticing movements and sounds—or words of robin speech, we might call them—were coaxing the young bird along towards the bush where were plenty of currants close to the ground, but he persisted in keeping his bill open to be fed. The supposed mother watched from a pear tree close by, while the one believed to be the father bird continued to flit about the bush, helping himself to currants, letting the young one see him do it, but steadily refusing to feed it, while he peremptorily said to him sharply in bird talk, "You do it," "so, so, so, so."

At last the young bird lit on a twig beside the old bird, still opening his bill to be fed. The father pecked at him and then flew away. The deserted youngster evidently thought to himself, "This, now means business, and I must risk my precious bill, or go without my currants." So he made a dive at one and swallowed it with a note of victory and then waited to see if either of his parents, both of whom were singing in jubilant triumph, would give him another. The one supposed to be the mother, with a look as if all very funny, and the young bird's enforced self-conquest reminds one of the pretty little domestic play, at the end of which the lady faints in the act of repeating the formula: "Thank goodness, the table is spread."

Was It a Miracle?

"The marvellous cure of Mrs. Rena J. Stout of Consumption has created intense excitement in Cammack, Ind.," writes Marion Stuart, a leading druggist of Muncie, Ind. She only weighed 30 pounds when her doctor in Yorktown said she must soon die. Then she began to use Dr. King's New Discovery and gained 37 pounds in weight and was completely cured. "It has cured thousands of hopeless cases, and is positively guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung diseases. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at Arthur Hudson's."

All Records Broken.

There was an interesting team match last Saturday afternoon between picked teams of the Newton Centre golf club. Messrs. Howard Hollings and George Pratt captained the respective teams. The former won 20 to 8. All records were broken by Percy Gilbert with a gross score of 70.

It is the medicine above all others for catarrh and is worth its weight in gold. Ely's Cream Balm does all that is claimed for it—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn. My son was afflicted with catarrh. He used Ely's Cream Balm and the disagreeable catarrh all left him.—J. C. Olmstead, Arcola, Ill.

The Balm does not irritate or cause sneezing. Sold by druggists at 50c. or mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., New York.

At a Methodist meeting a good old man, whose emotion was in excess of his intelligence, fervently prayed, "Grant that, when this life is over, every one of us may have a cottage in Van Diemen's land!" The poor man somehow got it into his head, by some law of mental association which no one can fully explain, that Emmanuel's grounds and Van Diemen's land were practically one and the same.

"What you want to do is to take the Chinese and civilize them," said the earnest citizen.

"I used to think that," replied the practical friend, "but now I have no doubts. They are already displaying a knowledge of artillery work as disastrous as it is surprising."—Washington Star.

Deacon Stratilace—"So many laymen are staying away from church and so many ministers are becoming more and more secular."

Deacon Brimstone—"Exactly. I fear we will soon have to take up the problem, 'How shall we make the churches attractive to the ministers?'"—Pack.

Sun Storms.

The connection between the aurora, sun spots and magnetic disturbances has never been explained, but many observations have shown that it definitely exists. The outbreak of a cyclonic storm on the sun with the formation of spots is immediately registered in every magnetic observatory on the earth. Sometimes the disturbance of terrestrial conditions is very marked.

For example, on Feb. 13, 1892, a great spot, accompanied by enormous cyclonic disturbances, burst forth on the sun's surface. That night a magnificent aurora was visible all over the northern half of the United States and in many parts of Europe. Telegraphing was carried on between New York and Albany without batteries, so strong were the earth currents. The telegraph system of Sweden was completely paralyzed, and in Russia much difficulty was experienced with the telegraph lines. At the Kew observatory in England the magnetic needle swung two degrees out of its normal position. All this was furnished by physicists and astronomers a fruitful field for study, and a vast mass of observations has been accumulated, but so far no satisfactory explanation of the mysterious bond of sympathy between solar and terrestrial influences has been forthcoming, nor does any one yet know the true nature of the aurora.

O'Connell and the Tipperary Boys.
At Tipperary, brave Tipperary, they wanted to take the horses from O'Connell's carriage and draw him themselves upon his way. "This will never do," he said to his daughter-in-law. "Their intentions are excellent, but they'll get so excited that we'll find ourselves in the ditch presently."

Bursting open the carriage door, in a moment he was out among these gigantic Tipperary men, just as big as any one of them. "Now, boys, be reasonable," he said. "Leave the horses under the carriage."

"But, shure, we'd rather pull you along ourselves, sir," was the reply as the preparations for so doing went gallantly forward.
"All right; on your own heads be it!" cried O'Connell good humoredly, and, throwing off his coat, he set to work with pugilistic intent, boxing them right and left until he got them to desist. Their amusement and delight knew no bounds, and when, on regaining the carriage, he doubled up his hand and shook it at them, with a beaming smile and a twinkling eye, the air was rent with enthusiastic shouting, and he drove off even a greater hero than when he had come.—Donahoe's Magazine.

She Liked Variety.
She is a very nice little girl, and yet she has an imagination so vivid that people can't help wondering once in awhile what is going to become of it. The little girl can and does tell the most marvelous tales, and when she is reproved she is entirely complacent and cannot see that her effective inventions are anything more than jokes. One of these she told to an interested neighbor, at whose house she called frequently.

"How is your mamma, dear?" asked the neighbor one morning when the little girl made her appearance.

"She is very sick," answered the little girl earnestly. "Nelly (her sister) and I were up with her all night. We called the doctor." But when the kind neighbor went in haste to see her sick friend she found her in every respect as well as ever.

"Why did you tell kind Mrs. Blank such a story about me?" asked mamma seriously of her little girl at the first opportunity.

"Well, mamma," said the little girl, with a toss of her curls, "Mrs. Blank asks me every single morning how you are, and I got tired of telling her that you are very well."—New York Times.

Too Honest.

A lawyer took in a new boy the other day, and, as he had suffered to some extent from the depredations of the former one, he determined to try the new boy's honesty at once. He thereupon placed a $5 note under a weight on his desk and walked out without a word. Upon his return, half an hour later, the note was gone, and half a dollar in silver had taken its place.

"Boy, when I went out I left $5 under this weight."

"Yes, sir, but you hadn't been gone five minutes when a man came in with a bill against you for $4.50. I guess the change is correct?"

"You paid the bill?"

"Yes, sir. There it is, all receipted. The man said it had slipped your mind for the past four years, and so—"

He did not get any further before he made a rush for the door. That boy is not in the law business any more.—Chicago News.

A Distinction.

—The executive board of the free reading room held a meeting at the home of Mr. Lewis P. Everett of High street on Wednesday evening of this week.

—Mrs. Charles Mills, Miss Mills and Master Fred and Phyllis Mills of High street are spending six weeks at Hampton Beach. Master Harry Haworth accompanied them.

—Rev. H. A. Sherman and family leave July 30th for a month's stay at East Walpole. Mr. Sherman is to occupy the manse of Rev. Mr. Birney of that place during the month of August.

—If this weather continues the bath house will be crowded most of the time. It is hoped that contributions will be made freely so that the committee may have the building finished by August 1.

—There is a movement towards a play ground for the village. It is hoped that the committee who have it in charge will have the hearty co-operation of the village. We are much in need of a place where the boys may congregate and play games.

—The people of the community regret to hear of the death of Mr. Harry K. Dresser, which occurred at Ashville, N. C., last week. Mr. Dresser went South about two years ago in search of health, but has been failing ever since he went there. The remains were interred at Ashville.

—The board of health have been inspecting some of the houses of the village and it is hoped they will keep on their good work. There is need enough of it. The house on Eliot street which has been condemned by them has been a source of disease for many years and several other places are nearly as bad. A village, which has filled up with foreigners as fast as this has the past few years needs to be looked over occasionally for the health of the community.

—Our District Nurse, who boarded at Eliot, disappeared from home Monday night, and at 5 p. m., Tuesday, after diligent searching and anxious inquiries, her dead body was found in the woods back of Randall's on Boylston street. Her friends bore her home very tenderly, and after an inquest accidental poisoning was pronounced as the cause of her death. She was well liked by all with whom she came in contact. She was a familiar figure about our village streets and will be missed in many poor homes where she has nursed the sick.

"Well, my boy, what is it?" said the reverend gentleman, in his usual kindly way.

"Oh, nothing sir," said the boy, glancing again at the pile of silver and pieces.

"Only are you the gentleman what runs the slot-machine downstairs?"

SUNSET.

Turn not to the east when the day is declining
And the glory of sunset is here;
Too sad is the light the far billows defining
In outlines too pensively clear.
In outlines too pensively clear.
Though fair was the morning its gladness is past,
And the day's brightest beams are reserved for the last.

The morn is for growth, and the noontide is stronger
In all that is bravest and best,
But the hands become weary as shadows grow longer.
And we look to the evening for rest.
And why should we sigh for the morning's delight
When ripe for the quiet and peace of the night?

Turn not to the east when the day is declining,
Nor muse on the past with a tear,
When bright o'er the hilltops the red light is shining.

And the glory of sunset is here,
Enjoy, then, the moment, the brightest and best,
When morning is dawning away in the west.

WASHINGTON AND BURR.

Alleged Cause of the Break Between the Two Great Men.

An old lawyer, speaking of dramatic incidents in court, said: "Jere Clemens, a once famous United States senator from Alabama, told of a trial in which Burr appeared for the defense of a man charged with murder. My recollection is that the trial was in the southwest."

"When Burr addressed the jury, it was night. The guilty man was in the room. He had been the principal witness for the prosecution, but Burr had learned that this witness was the assassin, and in closing his address for his client he picked up two lighted candles from the table, and, holding them in the face of the witness referred to, he exclaimed: 'Gentlemen of the jury, there is nature's verdict. Now write yours.' At that moment the witness fled from the room. After Clemens told this story he wrote a historical novel called 'The Rivals; or, The Times of Hamilton and Burr.' In that book he wrote the incident into one of the chapters. The book is out of print and has been for many years. But it had a great sale, particularly in the south, before the civil war, for Clemens was a typical southern orator and a man of wonderful personal magnetism. The object of the novel was to make Burr a hero and to besmirch Hamilton's character."

"In one chapter where Burr was high in the esteem of Washington the latter is represented as reading a letter from Hamilton in which Hamilton detailed some scandalous gossip about Burr. Burr was standing behind Washington during the reading of the letter. Washington, incensed at the contents of the letter, turned quickly and saw Burr, to whom he said: 'How dare you read my letter over my shoulder?' Burr, as Clemens represents, stung to the quick, drew himself up and replied with all the hauteur of his nature, 'When your majesty addresses such an inquiry to me in the manner you have, the only reply decency can prompt is, Aaron Burr dares to do anything.' This, Clemens avers, was the cause of the break between Washington and Burr."—New York Sun.

Ballast For Ships.

To solve the question of ballast many expedients are resorted to, and the results obtained often are singular. The most popular ballast is stone or rock, and every shipmaster who sails from the port of New York knows, or is supposed to know at least, the relative value of certain grades of rocks at various ports besides the metropolis. He can dispose of a cargo of stone to contractors here which will more than reimburse him for the expense of loading and unloading, and if the shipmaster is alert he will arrange for such disposal many months before his return from some out of the way corner of the world.

Every time a sailing vessel returns from a foreign port she usually is visited by contractors or their agents, who make competitive bids for her ballast cargo of stone, if she carries one. This stone is used mostly for macadamizing and paving streets. Frequently material is brought over which is good enough for building purposes.—New York Press.

Music For Fish Bait.

An eccentric hermit named William Schueller, who lives at Franklin, Mich., is said to be one of the most successful fishermen in his part of the country, and he claims to call the fish to him by singing "Old Hundredth." He goes out in his boat and takes a station in fairly deep water. Then he sings, at the same time keeping his eyes on the water in search of fish. Gradually the fish crowd about his boat, he claims, and when enough are gathered together the wily fisherman casts a net and catches dozens at a single haul. The old gentleman has a famous voice, and his neighbors are inclined to believe his strange story.—Chicago Record.

Deadly War Missiles.

In 1870 an ordinary shell when it burst broke into from 19 to 30 pieces. Today it bursts into 240. Shrapnel fire in 1870 scattered only 37 death dealing missiles. Now it scatters 340. A bomb weighing about 70 pounds 30 years ago would have burst into 42 fragments. Today, when it is charged with peroxide, it breaks up into 1,200 pieces, each of which is hurled with much greater velocity than the larger lumps which were scattered by a gunpowder explosion.—Chicago Democrat.

Clean Bread

Can't be made by foul hands and clean, pure blood can't be made by a foul stomach. The blood is made by the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition.

When these are diseased they contaminate every drop of blood made from the food they act upon, and this contamination is carried through the whole body. It may settle in the liver, kidneys, heart or lungs but the root of the disease is in the stomach. Cure the stomach and you cure the disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition perfectly and permanently. It purifies the blood, and so by curing the cause of disease, cures many forms of disease in organs remote from the stomach.

"For the past sixteen years I have had torpid liver and indigestion and tried many doctors and patent medicines but I could not get a cure," writes Mrs. Simon Suggs, of Clyde, Sabine Parish, La. "Three months ago I thought I would try Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I got six bottles of each and I received a good result in a week, and today I am cured sound and well. The symptoms were coated tongue, specks before the eyes, disposed to be cross and irritable, foul stomach, bad taste in the mouth, tired feeling, a feeling of dread or fear, headache, yellow skin, etc. These symptoms did not all appear at once. If sufferers from such troubles will take Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets' as directed in pamphlets wrapping bottles, they will bring back the bloom of life as it did with me."

THE QUESTION OF LOCALITY.

The Brookline Suburban does not regard the question of locality as having any weight or importance in the selection of a Republican candidate for congress in this district. It says that a congressman represents the entire district, and not the locality in which he may happen to live, and for that reason the locality argument made by the GRAPHIC is of no avail.

We are not quite ready to believe that our esteemed contemporary is really serious and sincere in this contention. It is absolutely contrary to all usage and precedent in Massachusetts politics during the entire period of the existence of political parties, and it is also in direct violation of the usages that prevail in every state of the Union. If the Suburban is correct, there can be no objection to selecting all our governors from one city and town, inasmuch as they represent all the people of the state and not alone the people of the municipality in which they reside. But nevertheless it is a well-established custom which has existed for generations in both the Republican and Democratic conventions to select the nominee for governor from one section of the Commonwealth and the nominee for lieutenant-governor from another section. Governor Crane resides in Berkshire County, and Lieutenant-Governor Bates in Suffolk County, and the other state officers are selected from different parts of the state, with a view to giving every section of the state a fair and just representation on the state ticket. If the Suburban is correct, there is not the slightest objection to selecting the governor, the lieutenant-governor and all other state officers from Brookline, providing that town has good men to fill the offices.

The question of locality has always been a most potent factor in the state conventions of both parties in determining the selection of candidates. No county or section of the state can long be ignored in the matter of nominations, and there never has been in our Republican state conventions, even a disposition to ignore the locality argument. Suppose the Republican delegates of the City of Boston insisted upon having a Boston citizen for Governor year after year to the exclusion of the nomination of any one from any other city or town in the Commonwealth, and urged as an argument that Boston has a large number of men capable of performing the duties of that high office, and that inasmuch as the governor represented all the people outside Boston as well as those residing within, there ought to be no objection to the continuous nomination of Boston men for governor; would such an argument be regarded as sound, or even as having any weight before a convention of intelligent and fair-minded men? And yet this is exactly the position that the Brookline press now takes upon the question of the nomination of the congressional candidate the present year. Neither The Suburban nor The Chronicle sees any impropriety in insisting upon the nomination of a Brookline candidate for congress after it has been clearly shown that Brookline has had the nomination more than one-half the time during the past twenty years and Middlesex County has not received even a single nomination during that entire period, and has withdrawn no less than three candidates in the interests of party harmony and acquiesced in the nomination going to Brookline candidates.

Now what we have said of the locality argument in connection with the nomination of state officers, is equally true with reference to the nomination of members of the state senate and house of representatives, and also of members of congress. The selection of a member of the senate and of the house is very largely, and in most cases, absolutely determined by the question of locality. It was only a few years ago when Brookline was insisting upon the nomination of one of her citizens as a member of the senate from the second Norfolk District and claimed strenuously that it belonged to her by reason of locality, and if we mistake not, the present Brookline candidate for congress won the nomination on the locality argument. The only other senatorial district embraced entirely within the limits of this congressional district, is the Suffolk district, which is made up of the Boston Wards 21, 22 and 23. It has been the accepted rule in the Republican conventions of that district to permit each ward to hold the nomination for two years only,—the nomination going to Ward 21, then to Ward 22, then to Ward 23. Ward 22 now has the senator, and this year by the accepted rule of selection, it goes to Ward 23. Now, suppose Wards 21 and 22 should enter into a combination to hold the nomination between themselves to the exclusion of Ward 23, and should say to the voters of the latter ward, "You ought not to complain, the Senator represents the entire district and you are just as well represented by the Senator being named from the other wards as though he were named from this ward;" would such an attitude on the part of Wards 21 and 22 be satisfactory to the people of Ward 23? And yet it is exactly the position of our Brookline neighbor, who sees no injustice in the present attempt to combine Norfolk County with Suffolk County and nominate again a Brookline candidate to the exclusion of Middlesex County, which has not had even the honor of a single nomination during the past twenty years.

We have many representative districts in Massachusetts made up of four, five or six towns where the same rule of location in nomination prevails, and even to the extent of allowing a candidate only one nomination in order that no injustice may be done to the other towns in the district. The same rule has prevailed for generations in the selection of congressional candidates. Take, for instance, the fourth district, now represented by Congressman Weymouth, of Fitchburg, who declines the renomination. He resides in the County of Worcester, and in the northern part of the district; that county and that part of the district concede that the nomination belongs to the Southern part of the district, and there is now in progress a spirited contest which is confined to candidates all living in the southern portions of the district, to wit:—Wellesley, Natick, Waltham and Marlborough. In the Lawrence-Well district, now represented acceptably by Congressman Knox, there is also a contest, the Republicans of Lowell claiming that Lawrence ought not to be permitted to hold the nomination longer, and that she ought to yield it to her sister city Lowell; and this claim is made when there is no vacancy in the district.

Men like ex-Mayor Curtis of Boston, ex-Senator Cook of Milford, ex-Senator Darling of Hyde Park, all recognized early in the canvass that the nomination this year ought by all the principles of equity be awarded to Middlesex County, and withdrew their names from the contest and in favor of the Newton candidate.

The Suburban says it ought not to be a question of locality, but rather a question of men. This might be true if there was any candidate from Brookline of such transcendent ability that he dwarfed all other men in the district, so that in Congress he would make such a name as ex-Speaker Reed of Maine. Brookline has had a number of Congressmen at Washington, but if they have been of such a character, the fact has been skillfully concealed. They were good men, just like hundreds of others, but they did not make a national reputation. Hundreds of other men in the district would have done just as well. As for the present Brookline candidate, he is a good Republican, but even the Suburban will not claim that he is superior to the average Brookline candidate.

Consequently the locality rule has very strong force against a Brookline candidate. The rest of the district would like a change. They have united therefore on Mr. S. L. Powers, and the least that can be said of him is that he is the equal in ability, character and standing to any candidate Brookline has presented. Even Brookline must concede this, and outside of that town he is recognized as one of the most able men in the district, and as an orator or debater he surpasses any representative this district has had in many years. The opinion that Newton people have of him is shown by the fact that they have chosen him to about every office in the city and the only reason he has not held more offices, is because he refused to accept them. He has lived in Newton for twenty years and has steadily grown in the estimation of the people, and has shown a broad-minded and progressive spirit that has placed him at the head of social and professional life in Newton. Newton people are slow to take up with new men, but when a man shows himself worthy of confidence, they grant it ungrudgingly, and Mr. Powers has steadily grown in popularity during his life in Newton. Professionally he has met with unusual success, and the Republicans of Newton as well as the leading Republicans of the district, have prevailed upon him to be a candidate, and have pledged him their support. There is but very little doubt that he will receive the nomination, both because he is so well qualified for the position, and because the nomination clearly belongs this year to Middlesex County.

MAKING BRICKS WITHOUT STRAW.

In one of our Newton churches last Sunday night the speaker called attention to the needless hardships of some laborers. He instanced the low wages received by certain kinds of working people. They are paid so little that the wonder is how they manage to keep soul and body together, and yet they are expected not only to do that but be virtuous and genteel. He told the story of a sewing woman who debated whether her strength was sufficient to enable her to work all night as well as all day, and whether what she earned by these extra hours at night would pay for candles and fire wood.

While nearly all kinds of labor are now fairly well remunerated there are some lines in which competition reduces the pay to a scant figure. The question is whether it is not bad morals to be over eager for cheapness. The pursuit of bargains may be carried too far. Can any one take much enjoyment from the product of unrequited toil?

Another point made was that many laborers and small dealers are compelled to undergo much needless suffering by delay in paying them. They are expected to live and pay their own debts, but people upon whom they depend fail them. What are they to do? Make bricks without straw?

It is a blemish upon the life of the day that there is so much of this failing to pay for work when it is done, and for goods in a reasonable time after they are delivered. Now and again we hear of men with small capital being actually driven out of business because of the exhaustion of their means. They have trusted out so much that they cannot renew their stock. They cannot collect what is due them.

Nearly every store keeper can show a list of delinquents who are behind in their payments. The strange thing is that these debtors seem to show no special mortification about being in debt. They expect that their creditors will get along somehow. Get along somehow? How can they get along? It is another illustration of requiring people to make bricks without straw.

Few things would add more to the happiness of any community than the general adoption of a plan of prompt payment for labor and for goods. It is not always or often that people cannot pay promptly, but they either do not realize its importance or let selfishness control them.

One good rule is that people should go without the things which they are not able to pay for. A poor woman said recently: "I feed my children on corn meal. I would give them something better if I could afford it, but this I can pay for, and many other things are beyond my reach. I am glad to get enough of this for them."

A man in a higher circle said: "I would like to keep a horse and carriage, but if I do I would be unable to pay my obligations as they come due, and so I walk or take the electric."

Another said: "It would be much more agreeable to me to live in a house renting for $1000, but that is beyond my reach, and so I have taken a cottage at a rate far below that figure."

If one cannot afford a thing he should do without it, and this spirit actuating all classes would do away with much of the needless suffering which we deplore.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS AT CAPE NOME.

Corwin Trading Co.'s Camp, Nome, Alaska, July 7, 1900.

From five to thirty-five thousand, that is what the census people say Nome has grown to in a month. It has been an astonishing thing to see and something which no Arctic sea beach ever saw since the world began. From the centre of the town a sea of tents stretches east and west springing like white waves of surf from the edge of the sea and throwing a spray of tents back on the wet tundra where few like to live because of the mud and moisture. Fifty big steamers were at one time in the offing and discharged millions of dollarsworth of freight and thousands of passengers right on the beach. Luckily the weather was nominally calm and no harm came to the people and but little to the freight. What might have happened in continued rough weather it is not pleasant to think of. Mining appliances, camping outfits and all sorts of goods still line the beach, although great efforts have been made to clear the sands. At this present writing work has been begun on the creeks and hundreds of men are back among the hills, seeking new ground, prospecting claims already established, and working for other men. The reports from almost all of these creeks is encouraging. Perhaps not all, but at least very many of the placer mines are rich and some are very rich indeed. The clean up on one claim on Anvil Creek last week was $18,000 and there are a score of good claims on this one creek.

It looks as if the prosperity of the country about Nome was a well established fact and likely to last. Great business blocks are going up in the heart of the city on lots that people pay $20,000 for and sometimes more money. Other rooms in these blocks let at $50 per week and is scarce at that price. Indeed many professional men and business concerns have found it difficult to find a favorable location at any price. In spite of the great amount of goods landed the influx of people has been so great that the prices have held good. Lumber sells at $150 per thousand, coal $5 a ton, flour $12 a barrel and oil $1 a gallon. The prices are not as high as they were in the winter, but the clean up on one claim on Anvil Creek last week was $18,000 and there are a score of good claims on this one creek.

With the prosperity of the camp that of the Corwin Trading Co. has been kept pace. The large amount of goods obtained from the wrecked Catherine Sudden of which I wrote in my last have been sold at the most excellent figures as well as the goods brought in on the Corwin and that vessel has just returned from a second successful trading trip to the bleak shores of Siberia where trade with the natives has been very satisfactory. A large amount of furs, native boots and garments, reindeer skins and other goods were thus obtained and sell well here at home. I went on this second trip of the Corwin and found the shores of Siberia a very interesting place. Ice still fills the bay and lines the rough headlands there and in some places was 50 or 60 feet in thickness. Here we saw great herds of walrus and ivory tusks were obtained from the unwieldy masters. The hide of these animals is used in many manufactures of the natives. One of the articles made from walrus hide is the sole of the rubber boot, or mukluk, the sole being cut from a single piece of walrus hide into shape by the women. The teeth of some of these women are worn nearly to the gum by the constant making of mukluk soles, and the sight of the operation is an interesting but unsavory one. The boot tops are made from the skin of the hair seal, tanned for the summer boots but left with the fur on for winter. These boots are a favorite foot gear in Nome and we brought back many hundred pair.

They are not shapely or handsome but are very easy on the foot and are worn with a handful of straw or dried grass in the bottom. For walking in the beach sand or on the spongy tundra they are unexcelled. Fur great coats or "parkies" made of reindeer skins or of the skin of the arctic squirrel are also much in favor and we have many of these. Muk-luks and parkies are getting to be a favorite costume of the members of the Corwin Trading Company and they should be seen thus attired to be appreciated.

The company has already begun work on its mining ventures. At its claim on Twin Mountain Creek, a tributary to Boulder in the richest district here, the output of gold has already reached bed rock and gold may be found with a pan anywhere on the claim. When the sluices are well established and development work is a little farther along we expect phenomenal results from this ground. Twin Mountain is about twelve miles back in the hills and is reached by boat along the shallow Snake River or by pack train. A train of five or six pack horses has just left camp heavily laden with supplies for this outpost. Down the coast some thirty miles to the eastward, at Bluff City near Topkuk, the company has also established a sluicing plant in the rich beach diggings at that place. Here the first clean up after a thirty hours run of the sluices gave returns of six hundred dollars in bright gold.

The Corwin leaves in a day or so for the coal mines which are one of the brightest prospects we now have on hand. And thus the work of the corporation is being pushed in many directions, carefully planned, and though the season is not more than begun, so far has been successful both in the Arctic and the West, and the northern climate seems to agree well with us all. Of our further adventures and with what success they meet I will write in another letter.

Your, very truly,
F. W. HUESTIS.

JUDGE NOT.

A SERMON PREACHED IN CENTRAL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, NEWTONVILLE, JULY 22, 1900, BY THE PASTOR, REV. O. S. DAVIS.

"Judge not, that ye be not judged." Matt. 7:1.

There are some things which this text does not mean.

Jesus did not mean to tell his disciples or to teach us that we are to hold no standard of right and wrong, according to which all judgment must necessarily be pronounced. On the other hand, the Master himself held the highest and most exacting standard, and he insisted upon bringing it forward as the rule by which men were to be tested; The religion which Jesus inspired is a religion of ideals which must be applied to life, and it is impossible to separate the ethics of Jesus from his religion. The two are not identical. Conduct grows out of faith. It is faith that inspires conduct. Hence the two are inseparable. The moral standard of the Christian church will be as high as its faith is deep and pure. The more perfect the conduct, the deeper the Christian's faith will grow.

And Jesus did not mean that we are never to judge either ourselves or others according to the way in which we measure up to the moral standard which we hold. We must do this. Jesus did so constantly. He approved one man and he censured another according to the standard which he set himself to the requirements of his religious ideal. The Pharisees and the deacons came in for their just part in his scorn and reproach. Jesus was a judge. He held a standard and he estimated the worth of other men according to that standard. This is right. There are certain safeguards which society has thrown about itself, and we announce with eminent justice that the world of their practice and of their life is hard. The man who leads a dissolute life, and the woman who degrades her honor, must meet the heavy hand of society, and it is right that they should. It is to be said regarding human judgments: every sinner who wants to be better should be given a chance; and every one should be treated with even justice, irrespective of wealth, social position, or the color of the skin. Justices for all and an even chance for each is a watchword that we need constantly to keep before us.

The text therefore does not mean, either that we are to have no moral standard, or that we are to make no strenuous effort to apply that standard to our own conduct or to the lives of others.

What, then, does the text mean? Jesus has been aiming his teaching directly at the Pharisees, and he has just spoken about the superficial character of their religion. Now he turns to another phase of it, and touches the critical, censorious nature of their practice. If we put the text into another form, accurately translating the present tense of the verb, it will read, "Do not be always judging others." It is the censorious, critical, censorious spirit, then, which the text bids us to avoid.

And there are still a great many people who constantly see the faults of others, and who are ever ready to sit in judgment upon them. The day of the censorious spirit has not passed away. This text is necessary, even among us Christian brethren, whose thought and practice ought both to be farthest from such a critical mood.

For it is so unjust! I want to be judged by a perfect law executed by a perfect lawgiver. There can be but one just judge. God the Heavenly Father. All other judgments are faulty. It can be so. The human eye that sees has a note in it that obstructs the vision. And so, while we must always be keenly alive to great moral distinctions, and while we must ever speak our judgment, we must recognize always that our decision is faulty, and we are generally better withheld than voiced. In the development of the theme this morning I propose therefore to show first that all human judgment is faulty, so far as final decision is concerned; and in the second place I shall make a plea for the Christian grace of withheld judgment.

There are four reasons why we never can perfectly judge our fellow-men. Let us study them briefly.

First, every man's knowledge of a moral standard and his ability to reach it depend very largely upon his birth and his early training. Until we know this we cannot judge him justly. Heredity enters our problem at this point.

I believe in the freedom of the will and that we have the power to know and do the will of God. And yet it is impossible not to recognize the fact that there are some inevitable limitations to perfect freedom. Every one of us has inherited certain inheritance from the past; we do not come into this world with equal moral endowments. Men are trying to make heredity explain too much. The free spirit of man is greater than the gift of the past. And yet there is something to be said for it. Let me take a boy whose father was a man of intense uncontrolled passion, and whose mother was a woman of great piety and peace. The boy has come into the world bearing with him the discord, the intemperance and the lack of thrift which his father and mother gave him.

And on the other hand we will place a boy who comes into the world in a home where strong manhood and gentle womanhood have united to give him their choicest gifts and most gracious impulses. I do not mean to say that the first boy will surely go wrong and the second boy surely go right. It is impossible to reckon the course from this early start. But the probabilities are that the two lives will diverge in the direction of the first tendency. My point, however, is this: Suppose they do. Suppose the first boy becomes thriftless and intemperate. He is known as a "good-hearted" man, and did you ever know an intemperate man who was not "good-hearted," but his appetites are too strong for his power of self-mastery. The second boy grows up to manhood, retains his social standing, and his character is marked by the first tendency. One boy has become a man whose life is very imperfect; the life of the other is better than the average.

But now before you and I call the former a thriftless inebriate and the second a blameless and useful citizen, let us be very sure that we know, after all, just how far the inheritance of birth has entered into this difference. One man is impulsive and improvident. He indulges his appetites and becomes an occasional drunkard. The other is calm, careful and self-controlled. But the passion of one father and the self-mastery of the other is reflected in these boys. Some day the former goes on a spree; the latter adopts an underhand method and cleverly cheats his competitor in business. And society calls one man a drunkard and the other a great financier. But the recording angels—there surely are such—judge otherwise, and they record the sin against the man who, born to better things, lost his honor in his selfish, fraudulent transaction. I dare say only this—that the man who does a grave wrong, and yet struggles, even in doing it, against the in-born tendencies of his soul, this man is far less to be blamed than is the one who, born to nobleness and to all God-like things, surrenders himself to envy, selfishness and greed, that is cloaked and hidden under the guise of cleverness and skill. God and the angels know, but we do not.

And in the second place, no man has the right to judge his brother until he knows the influences which have been exerted by all the surroundings of his brother's life. Do you know how the other half lives? Do you know how they are hurried into the narrow courts and damp rooms of the tenements? Have you looked into the "warrens of the poor?" And here, cursed into the world, with never a place where she can have her own mistress in a room that is all her own, with the breath of the saloon, the blast of quarrel and the torrents of passion blowing and beating upon her, the girl of the tenements must grow up. What wonder that she falls; wonder, indeed, if she did not!

And for her what remains? The taunt of society that brands her a curse, the company of other women to whom no stain upon her white garments! But a selfish, envious soul may show itself in a thousand ways and yet meet no harsh censure in human judgment. Suppose this second woman to be such. Whose is the graver fault? On a woman stands in the dregs of a sin that grew from the world where she was bred and reared; the other has a soul marred by a death spot, however hidden it may be. God only can be the judge of those two. He only understands. Perhaps, perhaps, the woman of the streets has the whiter soul. And you and I dare not judge them. We can only say,

"To yet we trust that somehow good will be the final goal of ill."

To pains of nature, of man's sinning, of death, of death's long taints and taints of blood; To nothing walks with aimless feet; That not one life shall be destroyed, Or cast as rubbish to the void, When God hath made the pie complete."

And we cannot be the judges of others because we cannot tell the real right and wrong of any case, until we know the moral ideal involved.

If we had one moral standard, perfectly clear and fixed, and then if each one were born with the same amount of ability to come up to the standard, all moral values and all cases could be settled very quickly and surely. But in fact neither of these things is true. Every man has his individual standard of right and wrong. We are pretty well agreed upon the great, essential elements in the moral ideal, but as to the details we differ very materially. Hence what seems right to one man seems wrong to another. The thing which I may have done with no violation of my sense of right, seems wrong to you and you to me. You know my standard, your judgment of me cannot be just. And you have perhaps done an act which seems to me to involve no fault, while to you it brings remorse and you cannot judge until I know your standard.

These matters of right and wrong thus relate themselves, in our judgment, to imperfect standards which we also imperfectly understand. The tenements give a girl her moral ideal; the culture and wealth of a home give another to the daughter of the rich man. They are both but faulty ideals of the one perfect measure which God himself uses. God is my judge, not man.

And then, in the fourth place, our judgment cannot be perfect because we do not know the amount of real struggle which has entered into the effort made by anyone else to come up to his moral standard. For he may have had great ability, he may have had a high standard, yet, because he put forth less effort, he may have failed. He may be weak and feeble, another man may have won a real moral victory without giving evidence of it.

The trouble is we see the defeats and not the victories, and the successes are unobserved. Here is an incident from a real home and a very real little girl. She had been forbidden to do a certain thing which almost every impulse within her seemed to prompt her to do. It was a long, hard struggle, and once or twice she had failed. Finally she disobeyed openly and her mother spoke to her very sharply and reprovingly. The little girl sobbed with a rattle and the brave little soldier sobbed out, "Why, mamma, you don't know how many times I have tried not to do this and have succeeded, and now, when I fail only once, you scold me!"

Dear little heart! All the struggle without a single word of cheer and approval; then one failure, and a reproof! That mother is one of the gentlest and most just that ever lived, but she would not have been fair to her child for her own right hand. But she learned that day that it is hard to judge rightly the struggle and the resistance of childhood. I am so glad that there is One who knows all that I have tried to do. There is one Judge who knows the times I have fought and won, while my fellow-men saw only the times I have fought and failed.

How sad that a defeat should be so much more conspicuous than a victory! How strange that the bravest things we do are mostly out of sight! You and I judge other people according to the right or wrong of the deed. But how about the intention to do wrong which they successfully resisted? Is there to be no word of praise for this?

Robert Burns spoke out of his very soul when he wrote:

"Who made the heart, 'tis He alone
Decidedly can try;
He knows each chord, its various tone,
Each string, its various bias;
Then at the balance let's be mute,
We never can adjust it.
What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted."

These four things we cannot fully know: the inheritance, the surroundings, the standards, and the struggle of another; and since we cannot know these things, we cannot be the judges of our brethren.

So finally I plead for a Christian grace, the grace of a generous, unobtrusive life on the part of every one of us. I need very much as if we would be glad to drop our critical spirit and our censorious way of treating others, when we really have such an amount of motive and beam business to keep us very busy right at home. And yet it is so easy to judge other people's affairs and to tell the other man just how it might be done, that we have neglected our own eyes before we have tried to pry into other people's secrets. Greater sin than to judge others, the most plentiful thing in the world, and real good advice is the hardest thing in the world to obtain. That is because there are so many motives and beams at the source of it.

Now, when you see some one who is taking hold of a piece of work and doing his best at it, however imperfectly and clumsily he may be toiling, and however much you may think you can do it better, let him a cheer and a word of praise instead of standing off to criticize his poor efforts. That is the way to be helpful.

You cannot help an overloaded pack horse by piling more burdens on his back; you cannot restore the balance of an unbalanced wheel by putting more weight at the point where the undue load has accumulated; you cannot help in this world's work by throwing stuff in the way of the men who are trying to do it. Two things are necessary. Someone has named them "the kind silence and the right word."

We must have the highest ideals of right and wrong; we must insist upon conformity both for ourselves and for others; but we must also hold ourselves forever far from the critical, censorious spirit, that surveys everything that is not perfect and tear away that which does not please our critical eye.

Yes, Robert Burns, great, tempted, human Robert Burns, the sting of human judgment and the lash of criticism, God is gentler with him now than men were then. And I do not wonder that someone wrote this lesson from Burns's life:

"In men, whom men pronounce as ill,
I find so much of goodness;
In men, whom men pronounce divine,
I find so much of sin and blot,
I need to draw the line.
Between the two, where God has put,"
Judge not, that ye be not judged.

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES.

The August Atlantic contains several articles that will attract criticism and discussion. President Hadley's practical and much needed paper on "Political Education." Talcott Williams' "The Price of Order," how to rule colonies; Mark H. Dunnell's "Our Rights in China," most timely and appropriate in the present crisis; and Sylvester Baxter's "Submarine Signaling," a new and little known method of saving life on the sea. The number is peculiarly rich in fiction. Miss Jewett's "The Foreigner;" Alice Brown's "A Sea Change;" Caroline Brown's "Angels and Men;" Fanny Johnson's "The Pathway Round;" Foster's "The Danganvan Whoop-ers;" and Webster's "The Circle of Death," with the conclusion of Howells' brilliant tale, comprise a remarkable gathering of remarkable stories.

"Brown of Lost River" is the title of a new romance of ranch life described as a singularly vivid and fascinating story of the plains, which is published by D. Appleton and Company. The author, Mrs. Mary E. Stickney, was born in Massachusetts, and is now the wife of a bank president in Colorado. She writes of the life of the plains with a knowledge derived from much experience and with a charm which comes from her love of her theme. Mrs. Stickney has written many short stories, several of which have been translated for French publications. "Brown of Lost River" is her most important work, and it places Mrs. Stickney with the women of Massachusetts who have achieved prominence for good literary work. It is published in the Appleton Town & Country Library.

"The Jay-Hawkers," Mrs. Adela E. Orpen's forthcoming romance, deals with a theme so stirring and so full of interest that its neglect by writers of fiction seems surprising. She pictures the Free-Soil and Border Ruffian conflicts in Missouri and Kansas, and introduces the notorious guerrilla Quantrell, together with a dramatic picture of the sack of Lawrence, although Mrs. Orpen lives at present in England, her childhood and youth were passed on the Kansas frontier, and her personal knowledge and vivid memories are reflected in "The Jay-Hawkers," which will be published shortly by D. Appleton and Company.

"Pine Knot," a story of Kentucky life, is the title of the new novel, by William E. Barton, author of "A Hero in Homespun," which is published by D. Appleton and Company. The success of Dr. Barton's former book imparts especial interest to his forthcoming romance, which is a story full of the atmosphere of the quaint mountain life. The author has chosen the exciting period of the anti-slavery contest and the early years of the Civil War. In addition to the series of adventures involved in this phase of the theme, Dr. Barton has utilized a mountain legend of a lost mine, and the interest of a treasure search runs through the book. The story is singularly fresh, strong, and entertaining in both types and incidents. The characters include a very lovable and impractical idealist, who in his zeal to reform the world and save the nation from the threatened civil war, neglects his own family, and finally dies heart broken at his failure. The daughter is one of the heroines of the two charming love stories in the book, and the heroes are a circuit preacher and a Kentucky confederate officer. There is also a satisfactory ending which is important to summer novel readers.

DAVID CITY, NEB., April 1, 1900.

Gentlemen:—I must say in regard to GAIN-O that there is nothing better or less than it. We have used it for years. My brother was a great coffee drinker. He was taken sick and the doctor said coffee was the cause of it, and told us to use GAIN-O. We got a package but did not like it at first, but now we would not be without it. My brother has been well ever since we started to use it. Yours truly,

LILLIE SOCHOR.

Mark Twain as Legal Authority.

When the will of David M. Jones, an old citizen of Bayport, who died a few months back, was offered for probate yesterday, several of the children who had been cut off offered objections. Mr. Jones was a well-to-do Welshman, and had quite a number of children. He had been married twice. After certain provisions of the will were carried out, the remainder of the property was to go to his favorite daughter, Ruth. The first objection raised was that Mr. Jones, in drawing and writing the will, excluded could not make himself understood to the scrivener. But when it was proved the will was drawn by Mr. D. R. Hughes a Welsh lawyer, who handled Welsh and English with equal facility, the objection was withdrawn, and the contestants stood on the point that Mrs. Jane Thomas, one of the attesting witnesses, only made her mark, whereas the statute said explicitly the witness to an instrument had to write out their names, counsel contended, though the testator only made his mark. It looked like a curious objection to raise, but counsel for objects argued it with such vehemence that Judge Roberts requested legatee's lawyer to look up some law on the subject. He came in after dinner with an armful of books, among them an interesting looking one, which was promptly turned down by the authorities at Washington because the claimant hadn't signed his voucher. Then Clemens taught him to make his mark "which looked like a cross that had been on a drunk for a year past," and the matter was paid by return mail. Counsel argued that if the government recognized the force of a mark a country court of justice was not likely to err badly in following its rule.

Judge Roberts refuses to tell whether Mark Twain's story of his digger Indian's voucher controlled his decision or not, but he held the attesting mark of Mrs. Thomas to be in compliance with the law, and the will of the testator was probated in regular form.

Here, said a Cleveland man, who has just returned from Boston, here is a neat little four-barrelled conundrum that is entertaining the Hubberts. Listen to it: What character is there in the Bible who possesses no name, who suffered death in different form from any inflicted before or since that time, a portion of whose shroud is in every household, and the cause of whose death has been made famous by a modern author? Eh? Is it too hard? As Dan Daly Give it up?—An easy thing like that? Pshaw! Well, it's Lot's wife. She possessed no name; no one else met death through being turned into a pillar of salt; salt is in every household, and Edward Bellamy wrote Looking Backward.

The other day a clerk hurried into a lunch-room in Washington, found an unoccupied place, and one of the little waiters called to the colored waiter: "Bring me a sandwich and a glass of milk." The waiter bolted away and quickly returned with the desired food and drink. "My dear sir," said the customer, "the waiter pulled forth pad and pencil and began laboriously to inscribe weird characters on the paper. Twice did he seem to finish the writing when he wrote stop, look at the result, and tear up the bit of paper. At the third attempt the customer called again impatiently for the bill. The waiter made a final effort and handed the clerk the check, on which was written, "One peice pie, one milk." "Here," said the young man, as he looked at the slip of paper, "I didn't order pie." "I know, boss," replied the abashed waiter, "but pie and a slice in costs just the same, an' I can't spell sandwich."

Sometimes discipline is cruel, especially where the disciplinarian has no sense of humor. Two ordinarily nice young women in a Massachusetts town were disciplined out of the church the other day, for breaking into laughter at a solemn prayer meeting. This was certainly indecorous. But when it is understood that a good brother had just arisen with the remark that he was "sitting on a thought, when the settee struck him," their merriment was altogether pardonable.—Time and the Hour.

The descendant of a New England Puritan divine has in his possession an old sermon written by his ancestor. It is written in a strange, crabbed hand, and plentifully besprinkled with marginal references. "Read slowly here," the minister admonishes himself in one spot, and "To be given out very loud and clear," is the suggestion for another passage. "Hurry a little with fire," he wrote in several places. The most emphatic and important part of the whole sermon is indicated by a much-underlined marginal note. It is amusing to know that he deemed it necessary at the climax of his eloquence to "Yell like one possessed."

WIND ON THE SEA.

The loneliness of the sea is in my heart. And the wind is not more lonely than this gray wind.

I have thought far thoughts, I have loved, I have loved, and I find Love gone, thought weary, and I, alas, left behind.

The loneliness of my heart is in the sea, And my heart is not more lonely than this gray wind.

Who shall stay the feet of the sea or bind The wings of the wind? Only the feet of mankind Grow old in the place of their sorrow, and bitter Is the heart

That may not wander as the wind or return as the sea.

THE SACRED ARMCHAIR.

Story of a Soldier's Return.

Captain Carus Bentley of the Eleventh artillery regulars limped down the gangway from the transport and stepped on pier 19 with the vague, indefinite satisfaction that after a year in the tropics he was getting back to God's country. He swayed a moment as he reached the dock and looked up at the ramparts of buildings along the river. No one met him at the dock of the steamer. There were no tearful eyes brilliant with joy and tender arms to crush him with happiness. There were no little feminine plaudits and girlish shrieks for greeting. How different was his coming back from his going away! She had clung on his arm and sighed little heartbroken sobs. She was sad then. He had been exultant, gay, happy, carried away with the enthusiasm of war and man's love of action. He had gone and won his spurs and got wounded and then lay for six months in the military hospital at Santiago smitten down by fever, wavering between life and death, not knowing then of the agony which he inflicted on his dear one with silence unbroken by a letter or message of any kind.

Regularly and faithfully, with the devotion of her sex, she had written to him, and at the end of ten months, having received no reply, she had ceased. Some of the letters which she had written he carried with him. His hospital nurse had let him have them when she thought that he had the strength to comprehend their contents. Each was an unhappy, passionate cry from a wounded soul, an unconscious rebuke to him, and each revealed the pain resting heavily in the bottom of a neglected woman's heart, the pain which she could not help express when the natural warmth of her heart was repulsed by persistent silence.

Bentley crawled into a cab and drove to his rooms. He had cabled his housekeeper from Cuba before the transport had sailed, and he knew that his apartments would be in trim order when he arrived, that his bath would be prepared, the fire burning gayly in the erstwhile deserted hearth and dinner hot and steaming when he wanted it. When he reached the door, he fumbled in the pocket of his blue uniform for his latchkey, and he felt puzzled when he found that it was gone. He touched the electric button. It seemed funny to him to have to ring his own doorbell before he could get in.

Presently the housekeeper opened the door, and Bentley's collar was alert at her heels. Mrs. Blossom could only ejaculate incoherent sentences in the exuberance of her surprise and joy and look at her returned soldier with all the tenderness of her devoted old age. "Happy and improving," your nurse wrote last," she said, "so I had no fear for you."

"Happy and improving," Bentley echoed under his breath. "I wonder if she, too, heard that?" He had sunk down into a big armchair before the fire. He was depressed and silent and still weak from the wound in his arm.

"Let me alone to think now," he said to the woman, who stood waiting for orders. So she quietly and unceremoniously withdrew and left Bentley alone with his dreams. The collic, too little noticed after the long separation, leaped on his knees and whined pitifully and lay her gentle head against the faded, shabby sleeve of his coat. Bentley took her head between his hands and as he looked at the quiet, faithful eyes two tears came into his own.

"Little old woman," he said, "you've been lonesome, haven't you? So have I. I've wanted to be back here millions of times. Yes, I have, little woman. And I had hoped when I did come that we might not be alone any more and that the heart might not be so dreary. Yes, Jess, I actually began to imagine that some one would sit in that chair opposite and understand me when I spoke and understand me when I was silent and love me all ways.

"Why, little woman, that empty chair has stood there opposite mine for ten years now. Yes, ten years. You haven't kept such close watch of the time as I have." He drew the collic close into his arms, and she lay there, complacently, blinking into the fire.

"We used to think that she came and sat there and made us happy with her laughter and her bright talk. She was always a kind of airy ideal of ours, wasn't she, Jess? But she was real for us—yellow hair, blue eyes, low voice, slender figure and all, and she used to come and sit there and rest her elbows on her knees and talk nonsense to us and contemplate the burning embers just like a real woman. And then she used to jump up suddenly in her sweet, impulsive way and come and kiss us, Jess—you on that queer white spot and me right on the top where the hair has grown thin—and disappear to make tea. Yes, Jess, it was all so gloriously dear, that dream and that image.

musingly, "I am going to tell you a secret. Don't get angry and bark, will you? I haven't told you before because there wasn't time before I went away. But I met her at Mrs. Mantons' ball three weeks before I sailed. Yes, her, her, Jess; just think of it; the embodiment of our dream—blue eyes, womanliness, grace, ah, everything that you and I had yearned for all these years.

"I knew her three weeks, and just think of it, Jess, she said she loved me, and she promised to come and sit at the other side of the fire and to tease us and kiss us and make tea for us. Ah, little woman, I began to believe that our dream was coming true." The collic lifted herself with a quick spring and stood upright on her knees and pricking up her ears to listen began to bark furiously at the farther door of the room.

"You are nervous, little woman," Bentley said. "Now settle back and let me tell you the rest. I have wanted so much to tell somebody. It has been rather hard to keep it shut up in one's heart without even the comfort of a friendly, patient ear. I went away with her kiss burning on my lips. I hated to go without her, but it was war, and that meant duty, and it was the one thing for which I had worked and studied and fitted myself for 20 years. She wrote to me, Jess; yes, grand letters; and, lame minded dog that I am, I didn't know how to answer her in the way she wanted. I couldn't even grasp what she was driving at, and I used to think at times that she was aiming at a smashup. Well, then I fell ill and couldn't write at all. But she wrote and kept on writing for months, but I didn't get the letters. I don't know what they were thinking of down there to hold them back. Here they are, Jess, in my blouse, and the last one is awfully bitter; yes, awfully bitter, little woman, and I guess the jig is up. Gad, I don't blame her. Six months without a word, and then she wrote and said she hated me and loathed me and detested me and that I was a coward and that I could never see her again."

Again the collic sprang up and barked still more furiously. Then Mrs. Blossom came in and asked him if he would not go and look at his room and see whether or not everything was all right.

"I think there is something which annoys the dog," he said, as he got up to do her bidding. But she had disappeared again.

Bentley went to his room and stood at the door and looked in. It seemed dreary to him. He did not have the heart to inspect Mrs. Blossom's arrangements. He turned again to go back to the fire. As he reached the door of his den he glanced toward the chair at the other side of the hearth and then stepped back suddenly and steadied himself against the door frame. For a moment he felt dizzy. He ran his fingers across his hot eyelids to shut out the vision. A slender, girlish figure leaned back in its dreamy depths. Bentley looked again, and the vision seemed fuller to his tired, surprised brain.

"Louise," he whispered audibly. A yellow head turned and smiled at him in an old, familiar way. He stole over to his chair and sat down, looking at the quiet, graceful girl.

"Louise, Louise," he whispered feelingly. The collic sprang at her skirts and barked indignantly. A strange being filled the depths of the sacred armchair, which Jess had been taught never to use herself and to protect with religious vigilance against intruders. Now it was occupied.

Bentley watched her curiously. She smiled again and dropped her head in her hands and watched the fire critically.

"Louise, is it you, dearest?" "Yes, it is I," she answered calmly. "The newspapers said that you had been mortally wounded, but the surgeon cabled other news, and I concluded that he knew. I came today to inquire for you of your housekeeper, and you surprised me here."

"Louise, do you love me?" "That is not the question we ought to consider. I have proved my love," she said drily.

"Louise, I love you, and you know it," he cried out wildly. "Won't you come and occupy that armchair always?"

"Some time," she laughed exultantly, with sudden gaiety, as she got up to run toward the door. She stopped in the middle of the room and came back and leaned over to kiss the spot on his head devoid of its silken gray hairs and then the sunburned cheeks, seamed with lines of long suffering, and then the dear limp arm with its glorious wound.

"Yes, some time," she laughed happily.—Exchange.

Counterfeit Cents.

One of the best judges of counterfeit money employed in the cashier's office in the custom house was talking with friends whom he met in a cable car about the skill of counterfeiters and the large number of counterfeit cents which were in circulation. When the conductor came around to collect fares, the friend pulled out a handful of small change to pay him. The custom house man leaned over and picked a cent out of his hand with the remark: "This just illustrates what I have been saying. Here is one of the counterfeits now, and if you don't mind I will give you a good coin for it."

Even suspicious people, who invariably ring silver coins to detect frauds, never examine a cent piece to determine their genuineness, and it is probably the safest kind of counterfeiting that a man can do, though it cannot be very profitable. The cent which this custom house man picked out differed from the others chiefly in its being more worn around the edges and very much blurred in its letters.—New York Sun.

TWO YEARS IN GOLD FIELDS.

RETURN OF JAMES P. AKINS OF THIS CITY WHO BOUGHT WEALTH IN ALASKA AND FINALLY OBTAINED IT ONLY AFTER ALL MANNER OF PHYSICAL SUFFERING.

Nearly two years life in the gold fields of Alaska made James P. Akins of Williams street, this city, wealthier by several thousand dollars, but greatly impoverished his efforts of that country and its seductive offerings of incalculable riches.

Mr. Akins was modestly reticent in respect for his personal adventures when chatting with THE GRAPHIC representative, Wednesday evening, but was free in his discussion of the famous gold land and its conditions.

It was on July 27, 1898, that Mr. Akins left Newton with a party of eight gold-seekers. The destination was Rampart, and their ambitions were equalled only in magnitude by the wide stretch of land and sea that lay before them. It was Tuesday evening that Mr. Akins returned to his wife and family, making his absence within a day or so of two years.

From the lips of the returned traveller came a story of seemingly unendurable hardship, privations, desparagement and despair. Of the little band of eight in which Mr. Akins was included, he eventually proved its captain and finally its sole survivor.

Soon after reaching Rampart City the eight gold-seekers built their homes of log houses, and following the completion of the rude structures started forward in search of claims. The conditions of the portion of the country in and about Rampart were impressive only as the most forsaken, dreary and desolate section these seekers had seen. They dared not think of the absence of the daily newspapers, of regular mails and of even more primitive signs of civilization, fearing the very thought would breed early discouragement.

More than a year the band of eight sought claim after claim traversing nearly all the accessible country within a radius of forty miles of Rampart. Theirs was the story so many returned and unsuccessful gold seekers have to tell, hard work, little food and the most unsatisfactory results.

One of the number, Charles B. Whitman, aged 50, of South Boston, died of asphyxiation, while at work upon a claim he had secured for himself. Whitman was attending a fire in an 80 foot shaft when he was overcome by the gas fumes. There was no one with him at the time and it was later that his companions came upon the body. Whitman's death occurred during the fall of last year near Julia Creek. To the interest of the band, they gathered so bravely for more than a year it was the last straw. They had drifted about and were at that time upon the point of giving up. All but Akins did so and he formed a partnership with M. D. Quaid, who had come to Rampart, with another company of gold seekers.

Akins and Quaid worked the claim known as "A. Above," which was situated on the shores of Eureka Creek. Just before leaving there more than a month ago they disposed of their interests for $5,000 each to Lieutenants Camden and Blake of the U. S. navy.

"While I can't describe them," said Mr. Akins to THE GRAPHIC representative this evening, "I shall never forget the events of those two years. It was nothing but try and try, and if you failed you could only try again."

"My impressions before I reached the gold fields, of the people I was to meet, proved entirely false. There was no note of that tough mining town that goes to make up an ideal mining town of the west. There was no show of revolvers or display of shooting iron."

"More than 9 out of every 10 of the men I met had a determined purpose. They were all workers, all seeking gold in the interests of their families. Men of every class worked shoulder to shoulder for a common cause. I never met better men in my life than some of those whom I came across subsequently proved themselves."

There was not that disorder suggestive of Cripple Creek or our western borders for the community would not stand for it.

"The number of young physicians and lawyers that I saw was most surprising."

Some of the old timers were inclined to call them "dudes." Believe me they proved the sturdiest. It was their pluck and energy that carried them through.

"There was little else to Rampart than the stores of the big trading companies, which did business there. The number of inhabitants was approximately 2000. The city possessed a grave yard containing more corpses than the average New England town, whose life has passed the half century mark."

"Speaking of the climate, you wouldn't feel 70 degrees or 80 degrees below in that country as much as 8 degrees or 10 degrees below here in Newton."

"Our menu? It was the same old story every day, beans and bacon. No thank you, I don't want to see any here."

"The most perilous adventure, if you choose to call it that, was the sail down 100 miles of the Yukon from Rampart to St. Michael that six of us undertook. We were in a 30 foot boat, but fortunately our captain had been over the course several times before."

"Leaving Rampart shortly before we had been many who joined in the rush for Nome and its golden beaches. The story of the fabulous wealth of Nome and the same came to us last winter and aroused many of the miners about us."

"Some started without waiting for a steamer, and in the most poorly provisioned and constructed craft obtainable. They were reckless and in utter ignorance of the Yukon and its terrific currents."

"To be sure there was a magnificent panorama of scenery, but during the fifteen days of our trip we were necessarily on the constant watch and daily reminded of the fate of many who had gone before us. Derelicts, spars and torn sails lay in our course and told us of the deaths of rash yet heroic gold seekers. Truly it was very pathetic."

"The most unfortunate conditions that the amateur sailors encountered was near the mouth of the Yukon. Being ignorant of the lower river they had taken the southern arms of the delta and gone out into the Yukon shoals in Behring Sea far south of St. Michael, their original destination. More than 50 were lost, and some whose departure was unknown have gone down, their relatives never to hear from them."

Mr. Akins said he understood that there were thousands of miners in Nome who were anxious to return. At St. Michael he himself had heard discouraging reports of that country. He was told that smallpox and typhoid fever had broken out and there were so many cases that the cities of St. Michael and Seattle had made quarantine provisions against all arrivals from Nome.

Mr. Akins said his return trip from St. Michael to Seattle on the S. S. Gerome. He declares he will never again go to Alaska but will be satisfied with Newton.

Death of Mr. George Wallace.

Mr. George Wallace of Newtonville died very suddenly last evening, at his daughter's residence at Pt. Allerton, where he was spending the summer. He was as well as usual at dinner time, but shortly afterwards fell back, and life was extinct. It is supposed to have been caused by heart failure. Mr. Wallace was 64 years old, and leaves a widow, three daughters, two of whom are married, and one son. The funeral services will be held at the chapel of the Newton cemetery, Saturday afternoon at 2.30.
